Yeah, yeah. The Green Goblin. But that's not what we meant.

What started out as an anniversary lark for a CBG free-lancer turned into an intriguing inquiry into a moment in comics history: How was the decision made to kill off Spider-Man's lady-love 25 years ago this month — and whose decision was it?

Join CBG on an investigation into one of the most controversial editorial decisions in comic-book history — the death of Gwen Stacy.

You're a comics writer. A character bores you. What do you do about it?

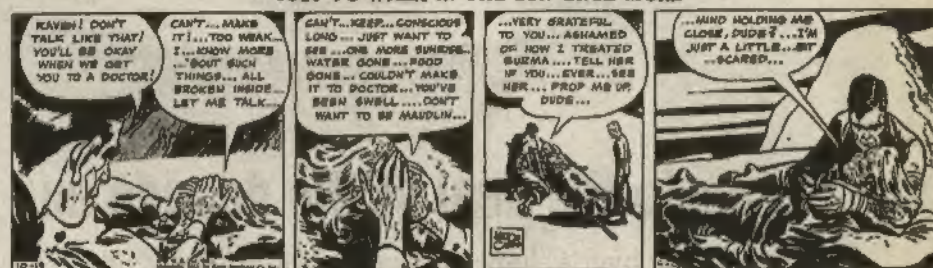

In the history of comic strips and comic books, one of the problems posed by successful characters has arisen time and again: Puffer Popover has been around for more than a decade. On one hand, he's a success. On the other hand, he's become a crashing bore. You're the creator. Now what do you do?

Hal Foster once said he'd never expected Prince Valiant to last so long. What had begun in early 1937 as an adventure strip focusing on a prince's adventures away from home in the Arthurian age eventually evolved to the point at which it was Prince Valiant's children who were the adventurers. In the process of maturation, the title character remained heroic — but his adventures turned more and more on familial conflict. And, with that evolution carried even further, the strip continues.

The Heap was created as a villainous, blood-sucking monster in Hillman's Airboy stories in the Golden Age. When the character functioned as an almost-mindless force, his story potential was limited — so eventually the creature was evolved by his scripters to the point at which he functioned as a force of nature. He became a catalyst: forever a hulking pile of vegetation covering the not-quite-dead body of a World War I German pilot, while he affected the lives of those with whom he came in contact. Once that happened, story focuses were on other characters — and The Heap could lurch on his way without further evolution. What Todd McFarlane plans to do with his version of The Heap remains to be seen — but readers could be heading back to the territory of a villainous, blood-sucking monster.

As Dick Grayson aged, DC took him from being Batman's kid sidekick to working on his own, entering romantic entanglements, and experiencing all the other plot developments possible in such evolution. Mind you, it had taken him 40-some years to develop to that point — but develop he did.

'JUST TO WALK IN THE SUN ONCE MORE'

Raven Sherman was introduced in Milton Caniff's Terry and the Pirates and was a recognized figure in the story's continuity — but she was not essential. So skilled was Caniff, she appeared as a fully rounded character, not an otherwise-featureless do-gooder.

When Captain Judas threw the bound and gagged Raven from a truck in 1941, the nation was stunned — as unprepared for her loss as it had been in 1929, when cartoonist Sidney Smith killed Mary Gold in The Gumps.

But Raven and Mary — while appealing — had not been a vital part of their respective strips since the beginning. In contrast, Gwen Stacy had been almost as involved with Spider-Man as Dick Grayson was with Batman. For more details on her — and why she died — see Page 28.

Nor is the problem limited to comics. Charles Dickens hadn't considered killing one of the characters in The Old Curiosity Shop until a friend said he thought the death was inevitable. Suddenly, Dickens became convinced that that was the only way out of his plot — and his decision was wildly unpopular with readers around the world.

Could anything have been done to evolve Gwen Stacy into a more interesting character? Hey, wouldn't that have been up to the writer? Think of the alternatives: Do any have more potential for compelling storytelling than what was done to her? What would Spider-Man's life have been like, for example, if she (the daughter of a policeman) had simply solved the mystery of Peter Parker's secret identity? How would that have served for conflict and plot possibilities, considering that she already blamed Spidey for her father's death?

If Gwen Stacy's life had been in your hands, what would you have done?

Marvel, Chaos creators do the monster mash

Marvel and Chaos will pool their ghoulish resources to throw a monster party. Scheduled to be published weekly throughout October, The Supernaturals is a four-issue mini-series produced under the Marvel banner by Chaos founder Brian Pulido. The premise, conceived by Pulido, pits Marvel's original supernatural characters against classic monster characters.

Invited to the party are such Marvel originals as Ghost Rider, Werewolf (by Night), Gargoyle, Satana, Black Cat, Brother Voodoo, and Jack O'Lantern, as well as such classic monsters as Frankenstein's monster, Dracula, the Headless Horseman, and the Living Mummy. Adding to the mix will be an assortment of Marvel monsters created by Jack Kirby and Larry Lieber in the 1960s, including Shagg, Gorgilla, Tragg, and Titan.

Pulido said, "On behalf of myself and the other creepy, crawly creatures at Chaos, we can't wait to resurrect the spirits of Marvel's supernatural characters. The chance to combine Chaos' cutting-edge reputation with Marvel's top-notch resources and history as the industry's leader is truly a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity."

Marvel Entertainment President and COO Joe Calamari said, "The thought here is to produce a series of horror stories based on the union of Marvel's supernatural characters and classic monsters. Brian thought of the idea, and I just loved it."

"This new venture is a prime example of Marvel's ability to expand into additional creative venues."

The project is the latest in a series of collaborations between Marvel and creators from other publishing houses that has included "Heroes Reborn" and the recently announced "Marvel Knights" project with Event.

Marvel's NY Stock Exchange listing in jeopardy

The day following the April 15 posting of Marvel Entertainment's fourth-quarter report, the New York Stock Exchange suspended trading in the company's stock and said it had applied to the Securities and Exchange Commission remove the company from its Stock Exchange listings. The NYSE took the action because Marvel's net tangible assets of less than $12 million available to common stock and its yearly average net income over the past three years of less than $600,000 did not meet the Stock Exchange's requirements for inclusion in the listing.

In its year-end financial statement, Marvel reported a $273.8 million drop in net income from Dec. 31, 1996, to Dec. 31, 1997. Marvel's net income for 1996 was reported as $745.5 million, while its 1997 net income was reported as $471.7. Due to the ongoing dispute between Marvel and its licensing partner Toy Biz, data for Toy Biz was excluded from the Marvel report.

During the same period, Marvel reduced its net loss from $464.4 million reported for 1996 to $254.3 million reported for 1997, a reduction in net loss of $210.1 million.

In other news, Carl Icahn's Marvel equity committee obtained a stay April 14 of a March 30 U.S. District Court ruling that Marvel did not have the right to appoint Toy Biz' board of directors. Until that issue is resolved by the Third Circuit Court of Appeals, it will delay the District Court's consideration of Toy Biz' proposed reorganization plan for Marvel Entertainment. A scheduled May 4 confirmation hearing on the Toy Biz plan was also stayed by the court's April 14 action. — Michael Dean

DC reshuffles sales and marketing, taps Wayne as VP

Bob Wayne has been named vice president — direct sales as part of DC's reorganization of its sales and marketing departments.

DC Executive Vice President and Publisher Paul Levitz said, "This move recognizes the unique needs of the comic-book specialty stores and affirms their importance in DC's plans. Bob's background as a comics-shop retailer and his insight into this channel has been an important asset to DC for many years, and we're pleased to recognize his contributions. We expect our great direct-sales team to be able to accomplish even more in this new structure"

As head of the Direct Sales Department, Wayne is responsible for DC's relationship with comic-book shops and its sales agent Diamond Comic Distributors. This includes sales, communications, customer service, in-store promotions, and such events as trade shows and conventions.

Marketing, headed by newly named Director — Marketing Syndee Barwick, handles point-of-purchase material, advertising, and retail products, as well as marketing planning and analysis.

Mass Market/Business Development continues to be led by Dan Brown, director — circulation and business development, and is responsible for distribution through bookstores, newsstands, subscriptions, and new methods.

All three will report directly to Levitz.

Wayne started at DC in 1987 as manager — retail promotions, after seven years as a comic-book retailer in his native Fort Worth, Texas.

"I have been a comic-book reader since 1959 and was Phil Seuling's Seagate account #40," Wayne said, "so I understand first-hand what it's like to be both a comic-book fan and retailer. Since the advent of the direct market, comic-book stores have represented the greatest opportunity for the industry and have provided the catalyst for great diversity and creativity in the art form."

Smith, Quesada, Palmiotti sign for charity at Pittsburgh con

Event artists Joe Quesada and Jimmy Palmiotti and filmmaker and Daredevil writer Kevin Smith will appear at the Pittsburgh Comicon to sign prints of Daredevil in support of the Ronald McDonald House. A limited edition of 500 Daredevil prints will be available for purchase at the convention April 24-26, with all proceeds going to the Ronald McDonald House for seriously ill children. Quesada and Palmiotti will be at the convention throughout the weekend, while Smith will be available for signings on Sunday only.

Obituaries

Lee Elias, Black Cat artist

Black Cat and Beyond Mars artist Leopold (Lee) Elias died Apr. 8 at the age of 77.

Elias was born in England and raised in New York City. After studying art at Cooper Union and the Art Students League, he began drawing comic books in 1943, working on features for Fiction House's Wings Comics.

He also drew Firehair, a series about an adventuress in the Old West, for Rangers Comics #21-29, also from Fiction House. Commenting on Elias' red-headed Black Cat, Goulart wrote, "He did well by her in both her identities and drew all the required props — from hoodlums and machine guns to starlets and movie cameras — with ease."

In 1952, Elias and author Jack Williamson created Beyond Mars, a science-fiction strip which ran Sundays in the New York Daily News until 1955 and was reprinted by Blackthorne in 1989.

Except for a two-year stint ghosting the Li'l Abner strip, Elias spent his later years working on various comic books, including The Rook, a black-and-white magazine-format series from Warren Publishing that blended science-fiction and Western genre elements. When Warren's Rook ended in 1980, Elias retired from comics.

He was a member of the National

Cartoonist Society and is survived by his widow, Winifred Ogden Elias, his children Karen Elias Cooper, Adrienne Wolfe, and Dr. Joel N. Elias, and three grandchildren. Memorial contributions may be made to the nursing home where Elias lived his last years: The Hooverwood Guild, 7001 Hoover Rd., Indianapolis, IN 46260.

Alex Schomburg, cover artist

Alex Schomburg, creator of some of the most sought-after comic-book covers of the Golden Age, died April 7 at the age of 92. He was known for his airbrush style, with which he executed colorful covers packed with lurid detail.

He was born May 10, 1905, in Aguadilla, Puerto Rico, and moved to New York City in 1912. There Schomburg and three brothers started a commercial art business. According to The Encyclopedia of Science Fiction by John Clute and Peter Nicholls, Schomburg's first assignment was for Hugo Gernsback's magazine Science and Invention in 1925. After a period of working on movie promotion art, he began doing covers and interior art for science-fiction novels and pulp magazines such as Thrilling Detective and Startling Stories. In the 1940s, Schomburg turned to comic books, providing covers for such timely titles as The Human Torch, Young Allies, and Marvel Mystery Comics.

In his entry on Schomburg in The Encyclopedia of American Comic Books, Ron Goulart described a typical Schomburg cover: "There was usually no single center of attention on one of his bright, ambitious covers. They were more like three-ring circuses, with Sub-Mariner pulling down a bridge and causing Nazi troops and tanks to go plummeting into a ravine in one corner, the Human Torch saving Bucky from being fed to a blast furnace in another, and Cap parachuting down and blasting away at a dozen or so hooded Japanese with a tripod machine gun. With his bravura style and meticulous patience, Schomburg always managed to convince readers that all the action and noise he'd jammed into a cover might actually be occurring in that single frozen second of time."

In the 1950s, Schomburg left comics, concentrating on illustration work for science-fiction magazines during the later years of his career. His comics covers, however, left an impression on his Golden Age fans that lingers to this day. Schomburg covers command high prices among collectors, and a new series of phone cards featuring art from Schomburg covers is scheduled for release in June by Argo City Company.

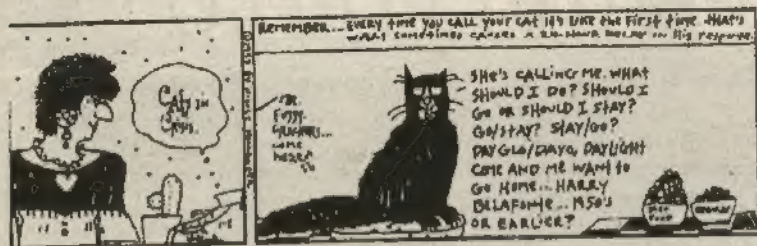

In a eulogy delivered at Schomburg's funeral, Steve Duin said, "Using his easel for a springboard and that airbrush for propulsion, he spent his artistic life in the cosmos, exploring the well of the worlds and bringing back the color photographs."

Schomburg was buried in Newburg, Ore., where he had lived since 1962. Helen Scott, Schomburg's wife of 57 years, died in 1985. Schomburg is survived by his son, Richard, and five grandchildren.

MegaCon '98

Postshow Roundup Comics Buyer's Guide

By Joe Kingsley
MegaCon Co-Producer

[Editor's Note: With the idea of expanding communications within the industry, CBG is approaching some dealers and con organizers in search of expanded evaluations of the state of the industry as reflected in recent shows.] Final tallies are in from MegaCon '98, and the convention once again showed an increase in attendance from the previous year. The fourth annual convention, held March 13-15 at the Orlando Expo Centre, reported an attendance of 11,000 over the three-day weekend. Comics, gaming, animation, science-fiction, and fantasy themes all played major roles as facets of this year's convention. The expansion of gaming programming was handled by Sunquest Partners Inc., a Florida-based gaming organization. More than 1,400 gamers attended the convention and registered for the more than 150 tournaments and demos.

More than 150 different exhibitors showcased collectibles and new products. Comics dealers reported that Silver Age and alternative titles were the biggest sellers at this year's show. Ed Savitt of Crazy Ed's Comics reported big sales of Silver Age titles in the $100-$300 range. Savitt said, "A lot of dealers ask me what I think of MegaCon. What I have told them for years is that, in a short time, MegaCon has become one of the best shows in the country. I've made a ton of money each year that I attended — I wouldn't miss it."

Chris Foss, owner of Heroes & Dragons based in Columbia, S.C., said, "This was my first year selling at MegaCon, and I was pleasantly surprised by overall sales. With attendance estimated to be over 10,000 in advance and backed up by a 12,000-square-foot store full of merchandise, I chose to bring a little bit of everything. I leaned a bit heavily towards collectible toys from the '70s and '80s."

"In the arena of comics sales, I moved some choice Silver Age, mostly Marvels in the VF or better grades and $100-$500 price range. Iron Man #1 in NM and Journey into Mystery #86 in VF immediately come to mind. I also only devoted a small portion of my display area to rare comics. A surprising amount of modern comics, like Witchblade, X-Men, and Wolverine, moved for me. The selection of this type stuff is always great at large shows, so customers are usually looking for deals, and my comics were not heavily discounted. Maybe people could just find stuff easier at my booth, I don't know. To finish on comics, Silver Age and Golden Age in the $10 to $100 range — mostly eclectic stuff like Barks, war, classic, science fiction, etc. — sold best for me."

"Some notable toy sales included carded Thundercats, over $400; a set of five boxed Six Million Dollar Man dolls, $600; Transformers, over $500. Star Wars and Super Powers also did well. Newer stuff like T-shirts, stickers, and graphic novels also did exceptionally well. Graphic novels alone accounted for more than $1,000 in sales.

"I plan on participating next year, for sure. My advice to all dealers is to diversify — not only at MegaCon, but at all large conventions with more than 5,000 attendance. Consumers are interested in every kind of collectible and subject imaginable, and we will all do well to cover as many bases as possible in our stores and at conventions. I applaud James and Joe on a well-organized, smoothly run operation: and, most of all, getting more than 10,000 people through the door."

Two new features at the 1998 convention were the 5,000-square-foot Fantasy Art show and auction and the RPGA awards conducted by director Robert Weiss. The show featured work by such artists as Larry Elmore, Mark Poole, L.A. Williams, and Don Maitz. Fans also saw Boris Vallejo and Julie Bell who participated in an hour-long question-and-answer session. Also of note, the comics and fantasy magazine Frank Frazetta Fantasy Illustrated made its convention debut with featured creators Joseph Linsner and David Mack signing #1 for fans.

MegaCon '99 will be held at the Orlando Expo Centre March 5-7. For information contact Quantum Cat Entertainment at (407) 599-0905.

Crowds packed the aisles at MegaCon '98.

Looking for Mr. Comics Fan

The search for readers outside the direct market, part one

A regular reader of Gladstone's Walt Disney's Comics and Stories may have noticed the slogan "The Best Selling Comic Book of All Time" on the binding of recent issues. It's a hard claim to quarrel with, since, at the peak of its circulation, WDC&S routinely reported sales in the millions, many times that of today's top-selling titles. But that peak was nearly 50 years ago, when comic books were a prominent presence on newsstands throughout the country, reaching a broad audience that ranged from large numbers of children to adult servicemen.

The same squarebound format that provided the space for Gladstone to make its nostalgic boast is a sign of today's tougher times. The company has withdrawn from the newsstand market in order to concentrate on producing higher-priced comics in upgraded formats for direct-market comics shops. According to Gladstone Publisher Bruce Hamilton, the company's retreat from the newsstand market was made only after unsuccessful experiments and attempts to work within the market's increasingly tight profit margins.

The comics industry might be content with its marginalized place in the American marketplace if it weren't for reminders of its potential: the record-setting early decades, the infuriatingly successful comics market in Japan. Because the grass seems greener almost everywhere a comics publisher turns, the industry continues to reach out to alternative audiences in an attempt to catch the attention of masses of could-be comics readers busting past comics-shop doors.

In upcoming issues, Assignment: Comics look at the experiences — some successful, some unsuccessful — that comics publishers have had, as they have attempted to venture into the big, wide world beyond the direct market. This week's focus is on the sale of comic books through adults-only bookstores and adults-only direct-mail operations.

New hoops to jump through. The adults-only distribution network is entirely separate from, yet similar in some respects to, the comics industry's direct market. Like the shops that make up the direct market, adults-only bookstores and video stores are a marginalized market largely outside the scope of regular newsstand channels.

Unlike the direct market, the adults-only market sometimes receives its products on a returnable basis and has a whole different set of hoops for publishers to jump through. Adult-product retailers are accustomed to larger discounts than are seen in the direct market. Some adults-only stores take comics on a nonreturnable basis. Others return unsold titles but are willing to accept new product in lieu of refunds. One mail-order company, Adam & Eve, has a sex therapist review every comic book it considers for inclusion in its catalog.

Beyond the Direct Market

This week: A sampling of adults-only comics producers describe their distribution strategies.

Coming up: A look at the newsstand market for mainstream comics.

Hyapatia Lee sells comics. Re-Visionary Comics is one publisher that has been able to jump through all the hoops and has seen its efforts pay off — to the extent that some 75% of its titles are now going to the adults-only market, with 20% going to the direct market and 5% going to other independent stores.

Re-Visionary Publisher Jay Allen Sanford told CBG, "It's a very, very lucrative arrangement. We have so many titles shipping to the direct market, we probably come in second only to Larry Flynt Productions in terms of number of publications in adults-only stores."

The key that has unlocked the door to the adults-only market for Re-Visionary is its Carnal Comics line, comic books narrated by or built around stars in the adults-only video industry. While such other comics publishers as Kitchen Sink, Verotik, NBM, Jabberwocky, and Fantagraphics have become a presence in the adults-only market, Re-Visionary may have received the warmest welcome. According to Sanford, the reason for Re-Visionary's success is obvious: Customers know Marilyn Chambers better than they know Milo Manara. "Other adults-only titles like Fantagraphics' Eros line have no name recognition in the adults-only market," he said, "but adult customers see a name like Hyapatia Lee on a comic book and they buy it."

Ugly rumors. Fantagraphics Market- ing Director Eric Reynolds confirmed that the adults-only stores are not a big part of Fantagraphics' marketing strategy. "It's a hard market to crack," he said. "Also, we hear the ugly rumors about organized crime activity in the adults-only industry and, not knowing how to filter out the truth from the BS, we steer away from it. We offer multi-packs to adults-only bookstores at adults-only trade shows and video conventions, but we don't aggressively market the Eros line. For the most part it takes care of itself."

The prices of doing business. NBM Publisher Terry Nantier reported the adults-only market has grown to account for 15% of his sales. "It has become a fairly important part of our business," he said. "We are selling increasingly to a bevy of store and mail-order adults-only businesses."

The adults-only market has become so important to NBM that it produces two versions of each title, one with a pre-printed price and one without a price. The "priceless" version allows adults-only store catalog."

Worth the trouble. In a time of poor comics sales, erotic and adult-oriented comics seem to be holding their own. Though shut out of Adam & Eve, Nantier said NBM has been able to sell titles through less-restrictive mail-order businesses and to increasing numbers of upscale "couple-oriented" adults-only "novelty" stores, as well as to regular magazine and video stores with adults-only sections. NBM's strategy has been to introduce these customers to comic books with adaptations of such familiar adults-only titles as The Story of O, The Illustrated Kama Sutra, and Emmanuelle.

"We're getting covered in the underground erotic press and in Adult Video News," said Nantier. "And we picked up a lot of accounts at this year's Video and Software Dealer's Association show."

Fantagraphics' Eros line is still going strong some seven years after it was introduced, said Reynolds. "Relative to the time spent on it, Eros sells itself," he said, "es-owners to increase the mark-up on comic books to something more closely approximating the profit margins they see in their video line.

Adam and Eve requires that all comic books sold through its adult products catalog be pre-viewed by a sex therapist.

Sex therapists monitor comics. One adults-only market that has largely excluded both Fantagraphics and NBM titles is the Adam & Eve direct-mail catalog. Ironically, Adam & Eve, a catalog of sex products for adults, has a far more restrictive set of standards than comic-book distributors in the direct market. As a result of difficulties with the Meese Commission in the 1980s, the mail-order company has instituted a circumspect review process for all its products.

Adam & Eve New Product Buyer Charles Huff said, "We're trying to be really responsible with the sexual material in our products," said Huff. "Quite a few comic books are turned down. There can't be anything morbid or shameful or degrading. No references to children. No B&D or S&M. No pleasure derived from pain — which knocks out tons of stuff right there. For instance, we can't carry Robert Crumb's comics. Milo Manara's Click! would be rejected because it's nonconsensual."

Those comic books that pass the battery of tests, such as Kitchen Sink's Omaha and Cherry, Jabberwocky Graphix' Adventures of Olivia, and Carnal Comics multi-packs, "sell really well for us," said Huff. "We've had comics in our catalog for at least 15 years, and, while things were probably more successful for print products in general a few years ago, the comic-book line still maintains its place in the pecially the manga stuff, which we can't keep in stock. There's one adults-only mega-store that orders hundreds of everything we print."

And Re-Visionary's Sanford, who does spend extra time marketing his Carnal Comics line, said the adults-only market is worth all the effort. An eight-page advertising section in Oui magazine and high-profile ads in Adult Cinema Review have made Carnal Comics a familiar name in the adults-only market. Even with the larger discounts expected by adults-only stores and the stringent content demands of Adam & Eve, Sanford said, adult-oriented comics have paid off handsomely for Re-Visionary.

Can these markets be merged? Recently Re-Visionary has begun experimenting with such "R-rated" comics as Scream Queens Undressed and upcoming adaptations of Russ Meyer movies. These titles, which contain "nothing explicit," are aimed more at the direct market, said Sanford. "The adults-only market was not interested in them at all."

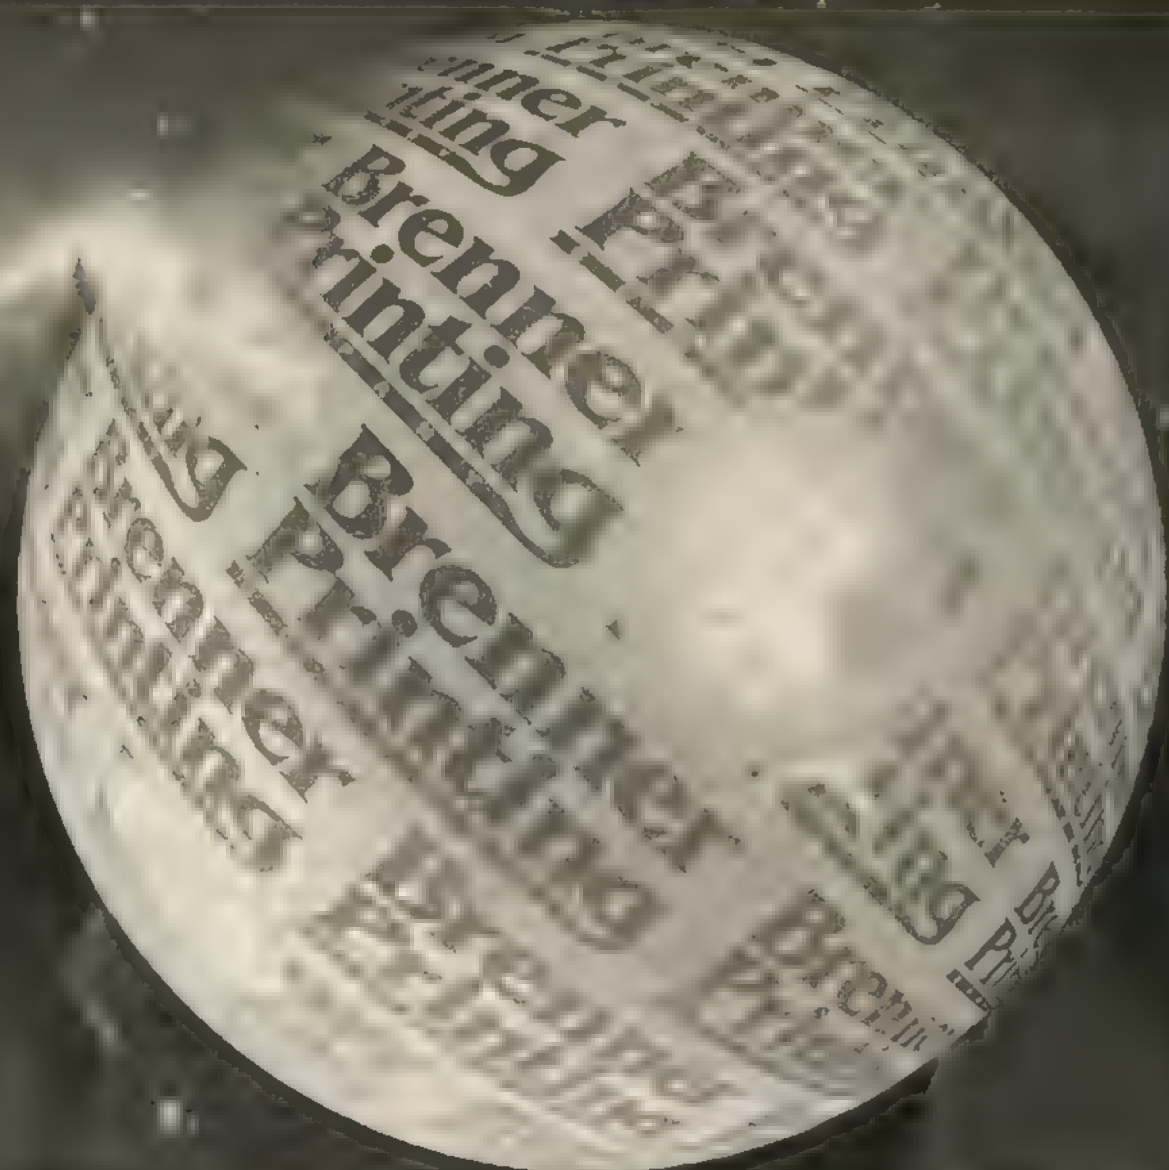

Undiscouraged, Sanford said he still hopes to bring the two markets closer together and has been working with Diamond's John Davis to find ways to expand comics distribution into the adults-only arena. "Maybe we can open the door to another market for the comics industry," Sanford said.

If all goes well, some of those new customers in the adults-only market might even become curious about comic books in which the characters keep their clothes on.

"We have so many titles shipping, we probably come in second only to Larry Flynt Productions in terms of number of publications in adults-only stores."

— Jay Allen Sanford, Re-Visionary Press

A few years back, during the tail end of the "debate" about the relative importance of words and art in comic books, prompted by the letter in CBG by "Name Withheld," somebody, perhaps Peter David or John Byrne, made something close to the following comment: "Let's face it, nobody has ever bought a comic book on the basis of the writing."

Not true.

As I examine my recent purchasing habits, I find myself adding titles to my retailer's reserve list, sight unseen, simply on the basis of the writer: the fact that Peter David or Mark Waid or Kurt Busiek or Matt Wagner is taking over a title. Similarly, I have dropped titles from my list when my favorite writers have departed.

Just thought someone ought to know.
(You're not alone.)

In a recent discussion in one of the news groups on Usenet, someone was saying that he hadn't seen an old friend, now gone, in longer than he wanted to think.

I have a few regrets of that sort myself and I have been reading the tributes to Archie Goodwin and others appearing in Oh, So? and other places and I found myself writing the following essay:

We always realize too late that we could have or should have or wanted to spend more time with people. Luckily, in my case, the two most recent deaths of people dear to me both came after a period in which I had managed to get back to a degree of intercourse and closeness that kept their passing from absolutely destroying me, as some in the past nearly have.

But.

No matter how much time I had with my friend Dave Minch, who died at the Denver WorldCon, it wasn't enough. Dave was unique and special, and, even now, 17 years later, I find myself thinking occasionally, "Dave would know that." And it hurts all over again.

And I want more time to hang out with the late Karl Edward Wagner. I'm talkin' friends is all! It took me a while to realize what a big hole the Karl-shaped hole in my universe was — not till Karl metaphorically tapped me on the shoulder from wherever he is and pointed out that he was perfect to base a character on in a horror piece I was writing.

But always remember, chuckies — we're a short time here, a long while gone. It's dark and it's cold out there and it lasts a long time. Make time for your friends. Touch base periodically, because even young people can be gone in an instant.

Make a point to at least get to know anyone whom you admire from a distance, talk a while, correspond — let them know that you admire and/or respect them and why. One of my personal perpetual regrets is that I failed to write a fan letter to the late Arthur Ransome while I was in my teens and he was still alive, to let him know how his books had affected my view of life.

Do not let a friend, loved one, or even mere acquaintance slip away from you with unfinished business between you. You will be saddened enough by their passing. You'll feel even worse, if the report of their death makes you say, "Oh! I meant to ..." because yesterday, or last week, you could have, but today — right now — you can't.

Your Comics Guide in #1273 finally prompted me to type these few lines to Oh, So?, since I find both of the items reviewed to be of great interest to me.

First, regarding comics inventory software. I have been using a program called Comics! from Tom Newlin of Newline Enterprises since 1993 and have found it to be mostly satisfactory, with a few, tolerable, shortcomings. I was, therefore, interested in your review and

Announcing ComicBase™ for Windows® 95

Now you, too, can own the world's best software for comic book collectors

ComicBase is all you need to evaluate, build and sell your comic book collection. Sure, you'll have fun reading the reviews of over 3,000 titles, looking at the included color cover art and enjoying video previews from comic-book-related movies. And you can't beat the 70,000+ issue index that lets you easily search for important character appearances, artists, writers, storylines and more. ComicBase even includes values for each issue for the past four years and will even graph each issue's value history so you can figure out what's hype and what's hot.

But what you'll really love is ComicBase's powerful collection management features. Logging in what you own is a breeze: with just a few keystrokes, you can enter in all the information you need. You can even enter whole ranges of issues at once or import information from major spreadsheets and databases.

ComicBase automatically evaluates each comic by its condition, from poor to near mint, and cleverly handles special issues, such as autographed copies, platinum covers and giant-size issues. When you're done, you can print price lists, issue checklists, price labels and reports that tell you what you paid for your collection and what it's worth.

And best of all, it's finally available for Windows 95 and is every bit as full-featured as its highly-acclaimed Macintosh counterpart. So what are you waiting for? Call now to take control of your collection like a pro.

found it, unfortunately, to be lacking in the areas I find most interesting. You (and ComicBase, apparently) focus a great deal of attention on the financial aspect of collecting, i.e., the ease of entering condition and baseline prices, the automatic computation of value based on these inputs, graphing of value vs. time, preparation of labels, etc.

One part of the program I use which I like is the ability to maintain separate, included, databases of creators and characters, which one can use to list creator credits and/or appearances with each issue entered. This also allows one to sort the database by creator and/or character appearances, as well as company, title, value, etc. This program also allows one to list separate storyline titles, like "Legends" or "Age of Apocalypse," and subsequently permit sorting/reports by these titles. I am interested in ComicBase's ability to handle these types of entries and searches/reports, but no mention was made (nor was it apparent from the screens shown) about ComicBase's capabilities in this area.

Alas, the shortcomings of Comics! are becoming too big a burden at this point. These include the inability to enter fractional or zero issue numbers and an inability to differentiate among variant covers. I'd prefer it if companies stopped doing this but acknowledge that that isn't likely, so any database I change to must be able to handle this. Does ComicBase? Also, can ComicBase convert an existing database into its format?

I guess what I'm saying is that I'd appreciate a more complete review of ComicBase, addressing aspects of the hobby and database entry other than money, and, even more useful, a review/comparison of three or four comics-collection database programs out there, listing their capabilities in these and other key areas. Is there enough interest out there to warrant someone generating such a report for you? I, for one, am wholeheartedly in favor of one.

Second, your review of the Smithsonian Collection CDs of the old Superman radio program is right on the money. These CDs are a great buy! I bought the first collection, am still enjoying it, and have now received this second (with Batman and Robin) and am looking forward to the exciting adventures of the Man of Steel as only Bud Collyer can bring them to life. More such reviews of related items are always appreciated.

Since I'm rambling, let me throw in my 2¢ worth on favorite comics. My "must read first" pile includes: Kurt Busiek's Astro City, Bone, Leave It to Chance, Strangers in Paradise, Sin City, Grendel, Supreme, Concrete, Mage, and Starman. The second tier of comic books I follow closely are those which I have stuck with through thick and thin since 1970 (and, believe me, it's been real thin at times). These are the Legion of Super-Heroes group, Justice League of America group, Avengers, Fantastic Four, and X-men/Uncanny X Men. The other X-family titles have never caught my fancy, and I think the cutback is long overdue. But I'm very pleased with the first four super-groups listed, as they appear to be headed in the right direction after a series of droughts.

[I just plumb ran out of room on the ComicBase review, so I focused on what I figured shops and people figuring values for insurance or sales of duplicates or unwanted material would be looking for: what, in short, a program like Excel wouldn't be easily manipulated to provide by a novice. (I also think it's a major bonus for a person thrashing through a collection looking for a specific story to have a label which lists contents details — and generates information on when the label was printed. It's that, more than the pricing capability, I cared about when commenting on its use in generating labels.)

Yes, you can output lists by creator. However, if you want detailed creative lists for each issue of the thousands listed, you'll end up typing in a lot of the information yourself. You can insert other information, too, especially in the "Notes" feature — and can later do a search which will pull items based on entries in "Notes." Oddball numbers are handled in the numbering field, and you'll find that Pete Buckford has pre-entered a lot of them already. The software also handles such problems as the 14 variant covers for Gen #1. Special issues, autographed copies, and the like can be entered in a "Comic Types" field set aside for them (though I found that I preferred to enter some of this information in "Notes," in which I also entered the year and month of the issue at the start).

It will take material from other databases, and you're right: I certainly should have mentioned that. Having first seen ComicBase years ago, I decided that was the system which offered everything I wanted and was willing to wait for its entry into the PC market. But I certainly empathize with people using other databases and wanting to convert them now. The documentation demonstrates how to transfer an existing Excel database and says the procedure is similar for FileMaker. However, it says transfers from Ablesoft/Microleague's Comic Collector software are more complex, and, "you should be willing to spend some time massaging the data," if you want to transfer it. You may want to phone Human Computing at (408) 266-6883 to ask about Comics! database's manipulation.

To reiterate, more information on ComicBase is available from Human Computing, 4509 Thistle Dr., San Jose, CA 95136. More information on Radio Spirits is available from P.O. Box 2141, Schiller Park, IL 60176.]

It's been a little while since I last took the opportunity to share some thoughts with the rest of the comic-book community through your wonderful publication — easily the best value for money I read every week — so I thought I'd respond to your question, "What do I look for in a shop?"

I have visited a lot of comic-book stores in my travels around America (and abroad) and experienced a wide range of satisfaction in my dealings inside them. I should start by acknowledging my local store (Big Guys in Mountain View, Calif. — Hi, Dick and the rest of the gang) as a perfect example of what I look for as a customer.

knowledgeable staff; above all else, I want to buy my comics from people who share my passion for the medium — not necessarily every title that I read but for comics themselves. I also appreciate advice and suggestions on new titles that I might have overlooked, but a retailer needs to know his customer's interests to be able to do this. Another essential part of a reliable service is ensuring that all pre-orders are filled, one way or another.

Material is the runner-up on my list. I read CBG religiously each week (well, each week I receive it!) and order my savior titles in advance through Previews each month — but sometimes I choose to flick through a title on the shelf before adding it to my list. I can only do this if there are sufficient copies for me to review. I also value the staff recommendations. ("We're so sure that you will like this that, if you don't, you can bring it back for full store credit." Now, that is what I call promoting a title). I also buy back issues when time and money allow, so a reasonable selection of older material is also appreciated.

An honorable third place goes to the environment. I don't expect a comic-book store to set new standards in retail hygiene — in fact, I really like the aroma of old comic books — but keeping a store uncluttered can be a real aid to shopping, as can being able to find a title without a Ph.D. in library studies or x-ray vision.

Strangely enough, cost comes in at a distant fourth (strange, because, in almost all other retail areas, this is a major factor for me); something else for retailers to think about.

I can't finish without a quick mention of some of the more rewarding comic books I've read recently. Big thumbs up to Marvel for the Essential reprint volumes of Spider-Man and The Silver Surfer — the classics at an affordable price at last! I also loved the Jack Kirby's New Gods reprint — any chance of Mark convincing them to reprint more of the saga? I'd buy it! In terms of ongoing series, there is so much stuff out there at the moment that I hope no one's overlooking Kurt Busiek's Astro City, Strangers in Paradise, Stray Bullets, Wolff & Byrd, Hellboy, Bacchus, Hellblazer, Preacher, and any of DC's Adventure series, particularly those involving Batman, like the fantastic Batgirl Special and World's Finest.

I'll have to save my thoughts on Wally Wood reprints and the current influence of Magic cards and super-hero toys on the sales of comic books for another time — thanks for lending me the soapbox.

It's been about a week since the arrival of CBG #1268, with Gary C. Banks' request for information about the '60s hardcover "juvenovels" about two brothers, one named Chip, who had adventures with their father — but it took me that long to find my packed-away copies.

The series was published by Western Publishing's Whitman Publishing Division in Racine, Wis. The spine shows the series title as

The Power Boys, while the front cover and title page say "A Power Boys Adventure." There are no prices printed on the books, but my copies have drugstore price tags ranging from 48¢ to 59¢. I have six, all written by Mel Lyle with several full-page illustrations by Raymond Burns. They are:

The Mystery of the Double Kidnapping ©1966; Whitman 1522

The Mystery of the Haunted Skyscraper ©1964; Whitman 1523

The Mystery of the Flying Skeleton ©1964; Whitman 1524

The Mystery of the Burning Ocean ©1965; Whitman 1525

The Mystery of the Vanishing Lady ©1967; Whitman 1526

The Mystery of the Million-Dollar Penny ©1965; Whitman 1529

Note that the chronology of the copyright dates does not match Whitman's numerical sequence. The list of books in the series includes only these six titles; I have no idea what Whitman 1527 or 1528 may have been.

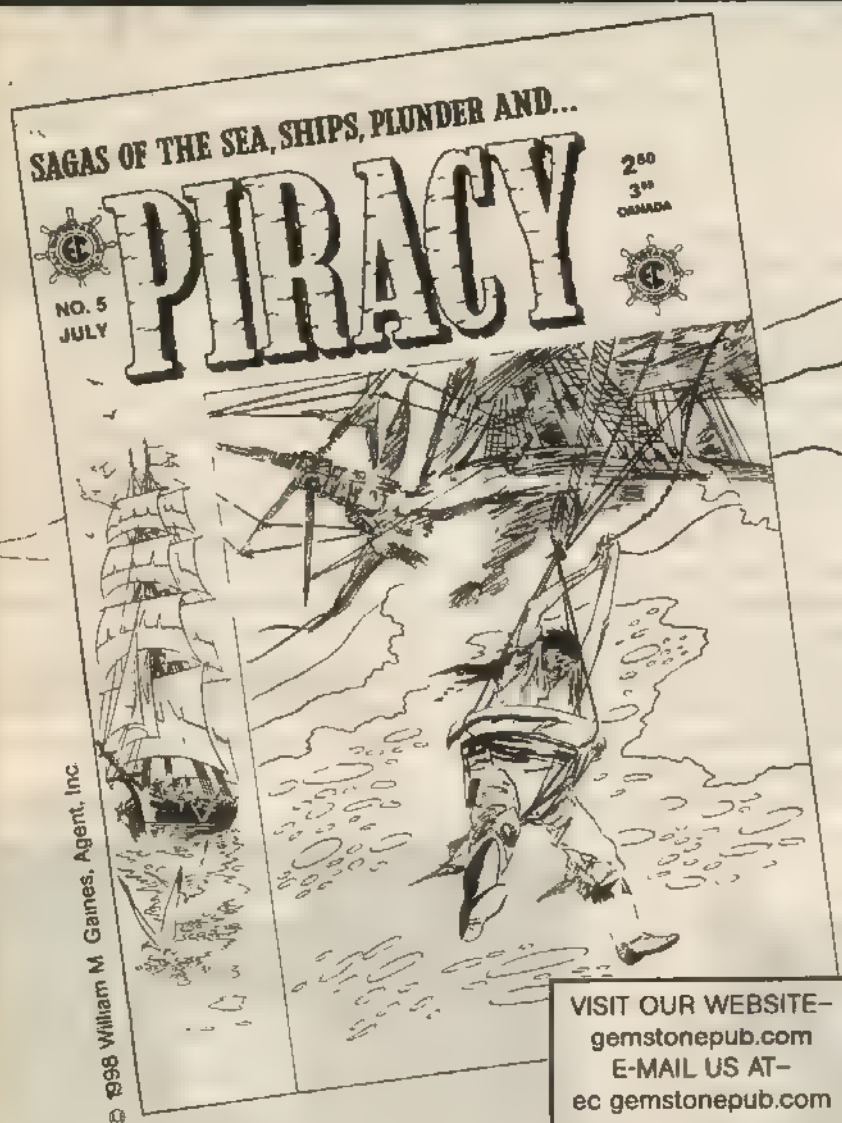

The two brothers are 17-year-old Jack and 15-year-old Chip. Their father, Thomas Power, is a successful freelance photojournalist who researches and writes articles for popularized specialty magazines on history, wildlife, travel, etc.

Their mother is dead, so the boys and their Dalmatian Blaze tag along with Dad on his assignments, which take him all across America and the Caribbean, treasure-hunting, cave-exploring in the Ozarks, covering scientific conferences, and so on. The boys are supposed to do harmless sightseeing while their father is working, but they keep getting involved in typical Hardy Boys-type mysteries.

My copies of the six books have been carefully packed away for 30 years, and the laminated illustrated covers are still in mint condition. But the cheap pulp paper is so brittle that I'm almost afraid to open them for fear that the pages will snap into pieces. These are probably the only editions these novels have ever had, so they may crumble and become Lost Literature in another couple of decades.

Regarding your editorial in CBG #1269 — shoot your editor and reboot your memory.

The sum of the squares of the sides of a right triangle equals the square of the hypotenuse not, as you wrote, "The square of the sum of the sides of a right triangle equals the square of the hypotenuse."

Try it with a right triangle whose sides are 3, 4, and 5.

Pythagorean theorem: $3^2 + 4^2 = 5^2$ or $25 = 25$ (correct).

Your formula: $(3+4)^2 = 5^2$ or $49 = 25$ (wrong)

[I believe one of the points of that editorial was that I was horrendously bad at math. I believe I proved my point (though it was actually through sloppy expression — which is, since I'm an editor, no defense — and I would have written it correctly and solved the problem correctly, given the final exam).]

In honor of your recent "all-legal" issue, further thoughts on child pornography.

According to an article someone sent me, it is against federal law to sell or possess images portraying the genitals of anyone under the age of 18 in a "lascivious" manner. The question is, what the hell does "lascivious" mean? The obvious response is that it means whatever the arresting officer wants it to mean.

While I'm pretty sure the ambiguous nature of the wording is intentional, I seriously doubt any harm was meant. On the contrary, the folks who created the law were probably doing their best to make it possible to allow police to put real pedophiles and child pornographers out of business, while minimizing nuisance complaints. In other words, they didn't want Aunt Frieda hauled into court because of that photo of her grandson Kenny peeing on the rose bushes, but they also didn't want some creep set free because the 16,000 nude Polaroids he had in the shoebox under his bed failed to show anything blatantly sexual.

Regrettably, the lawmakers failed to reckon with the Religious Right and their need to persecute those who fail to knuckle under to them. Aunt Frieda is often being hauled into court, and it isn't always a certainty the charges will be dismissed. While such cases rarely survive an appeal, few people have the money to spend on such things, and Aunt Frieda's life has by that point already been ruined. Scary thought — especially when one considers how many folks might have old photos or even pictures and drawings in books that can be retroactively declared pornographic.

The main difficulty when trying to eliminate child pornography is the problem of applying objective standards to a subjective matter. In other words, the lawmakers are put in the tricky business of trying to ban less an action than a concept. The concept, children used as sex objects, while, indeed, monumentally icky, is extremely tough to pin down.

To wit: There's an old Little Lulu story, "Little Babies," which has been adapted more or less verbatim for the HBO cartoon series. In the story, Wilbur wins a dare from Tubby and the other boys and gets to join their club by telling Lulu he's lost his dog, tricking her into donning a collar and allowing Wilbur to walk her down the street on a leash, supposedly so the dog will become jealous and come back. Once tipped off by Annie to the boys' duplicity, the girls seek revenge. They find Wilbur, Tubby, and the other boys skinny-dipping and steal their clothes, then return, pretending innocence when the naked, stranded boys beg for help.

They think the tough East Side Boys took their clothes and ask Lulu and Annie to find them something to wear home. Feigning concern, Lulu and Annie rush off and return with a wagonful of diapers, Lulu insisting it was all she could find. The boys are even less enthused about running around in diapers than about running around naked, but Lulu has a plan. They can don the diapers, get in the wagon, Lulu can cover them with her picnic blanket, and they can hide until Lulu gets them home. Having little choice, the boys agree. Once the boys are in the wagon, though, Lulu takes them to a steep hill overlooking the town, lets the wagon go, and abandons them to their fate.

There are few people who would consider that story obscene. However, the Doctor Werthams in the bunch would point out the story contains bondage, juvenile male rear nudity, voyeurism, sadism, infantilism, and humiliation. Moreover, if the story were suspected to be child pornography, it would be considered the responsibility of Marge or the publisher or story creator John Stanley to prove to the court no illicit intention was meant. Moreover, the comic-book purchaser would also have to prove to the court he or she did not buy the issue for illicit purposes and, even then, might be held liable for possessing it. So what's the buyer supposed to do? He or she can't sell or give away the issue with the story; that's also against the law. If he or she hides the issue, that might be considered an admission of guilt, and burning it would simply be doing the censors' job for them. Essentially, the comic book and its owner are guilty until proven innocent. And how can the owner prove what his or her mindset was when reading the story?

Isn't it great to be an American?

Andrew P. Berrier557 East Liberty St.
Chambersburg, PA 17201

It's been a while since I've written, but something happened to me recently that I thought I just had to share with other comics aficionados. As a comics reader for more than 20 years, I have heard and read many stories of people who stumble onto caches of old comics in attics, basements, and garage sales. But guess what? It recently happened to me.

I'm an English teacher who encourages and supports kids in their reading of comics, and my love and appreciation for the form is widely known in my small town. I learned to read from comics and I'm not afraid to tell that to my students. On a side note, that, in itself, is a great icebreaker with students, who imagine their English teachers sitting around in candle-lit dungeons reading Shakespeare's first folios.

But back to my story: An elderly neighbor whom I've helped frequently recently had the misfortune of his mother's passing. As he was cleaning out her house, getting ready for the auctioneers to come in and begin organizing the estate sale, he came across a box of 115 comics dated between 1964 and 1969, which he gave to me. (Thanks, Bill.)

I realize that this wouldn't be considered the Holy Grail of comics finds, but, as I am 34, this find is definitely from my personal Golden Age. The majority of them are Dell Comics: Walt Disney titles and characters; TV cartoon characters like The Flintstones, Jetsons, etc.; photo covers of The Man from U.N.C.L.E., The Munsters, Tarzan, etc. Others include such giveaways as The True Story of Smokey Bear, The Happy Champ: The True Story of Joker Osborn, and The Mighty Atom. But the truly important parts to me were the mid '60s Batman and Detective Comics. I grew up during the '60s, and Batman was always my favorite — and still is to this day. I've cut back on a lot of comics titles over the past few years, but I still get all the Batmans.

Words can't describe the feeling I got by holding those comics I had only ever seen in books and magazines on the Silver Age of Comics. Batman #181 with Poison Ivy's introduction. Batman #183 with Batman ignoring Robin's plea to respond to the Batsignal because Batman is too busy watching his TV show. That box of comic books made me remember the elation I used to feel when I was 9 years old and left Bolger's corner store with a few new comics, reading as I walked the one block home because I couldn't wait.

First, let me thank you for printing my letter a while back. I was really hit by the death of Curt Swan, and you allowed me to express my feelings in print.

I just wanted to say that I was able to manage a trip to America recently, and my girlfriend and I went to the two-day Big Apple comic-book show in March.

I had a great time buying Silver Age (naturally) and I got good deals off a couple of people, namely JHV Associates and my old pal Gary Dolgoff. Thanks, guys.

But the highlight of the event was meeting Jim Steranko by — where else? — the 'Steranko Room.' I must have stood in the queue to meet Steranko for almost two hours, and there were only about seven people ahead of me, so he was definitely giving a lot of attention to each fan. The Steranko Room had tons of classic art on display, so that helped to take your mind off the long wait. As my turn approached and there was only one person ahead of me, I realized that my mind was a total blank: I couldn't think of a single thing that little old me could possibly say to this great comic-book innovator.

So I resigned myself to the fact that I would just buy a few items from his table, get them signed, and be on my way much to the great appreciation of the people next in line. To my glee, Steranko was having none of this; he recognized my English accent and told me about his trip to an English convention many years ago. He was in such a jovial mood that I actually found myself standing there wisecracking with Steranko who didn't know me from Adam.

Al Williamson then came up to the front and made a funny remark about Steranko, which I won't repeat here, and, after a few comic exchanges, I said they reminded me of Laurel and Hardy but I wouldn't say which was which. Basically, I had a great time and I told Steranko that I knew he loved comic books as much as we loved his work and that we needed guys like him to perpetuate this business; otherwise it's going to collapse in a heap of computerized non-art.

I also got to meet David Mack, the creative force behind the Kabuki comic book. I have to tell you that my regular comic-book reading habits died out in the mid '70s. As a reader of the Silver Age and early '70s, my last great reading experience was probably Starlin's Warlock-Magus saga from 1975.

Last year, I came across a copy of Kabuki: Circle of Blood #3, which I opened to look at. (OK, I thought it was a "hot babe" type of comic book; I can dream, can't I?) I read it from cover to cover, and it was terrific. I went out and found all six issues and read the whole lot in one go. This is saying something, as I normally can't get past about page 2 of any modern comic book; either boredom sets in or the art just puts me off. Like the aforementioned Warlock story, Kabuki is full of ideas and sequences you just don't normally see in comics. The scripting is so evocative and dreamlike, and the art is so stylish and original, I've been recommending it to everyone. Mack was a joy to meet, and so much original talent in one so young is a very rare thing. He is going to take the comics world by storm, if he hasn't already done so.

And, finally, yes, I do have a regular standing order at my local comics shop, but only for one item, and, if you're reading this, then you're probably holding a copy of it.

[You offer the best reasons for attending comics conventions: You never know what will happen there, what you'll find, what indelible memories will be formed.]

And, hey, thanks!

Eric Davis23077 Greenfield, #180

When I was a kid, I didn't read Marvel or DC. I grew up regularly escaping to Riverdale and joining Archie Andrews on his many adventures and his endless pursuit of Veronica Lodge. Although I read any Archie comic book I could get my hands on, the only title I actually collected was the Little Archie series. Something about the way it was drawn — the innocent stories and the cute little faces (not to mention the fact that I was about Little Archie's age at the time) — made me proud to shell out 25¢ a month back in the mid-1970s.

Upon rediscovering my collection last year, I noticed that it was the artist Bob Bolling who was behind the majority of the covers and stories that I grew up reading. According to Overstreet, he began with issue #3 and never let up, until the Little Archie title ended in the 1980s. I contacted a few comics art dealers but could not locate any art by Bolling, let alone learn of his current "status." (I hoped he was still around somewhere, as it had been more than 40 years since he began his work on Little Archie.)

In CBG #1272, however, I noticed a review of Archie & Friends #30, and, lo and behold, it featured a discussion of Bob Bolling and his apparent return effort to the comics world. Based on the reviews, he is not only still around but still going strong. I only hope I can let Bolling know how much I treasure his work. I would be glad to hear from any CBG readers who share my interest or have any of his art available.

As a new subscriber to CBG, I must say the cost of my subscription has already paid off

[OK, folks! Let's keep Eric's affections alive! What bonding can people offer?]

ting back into the Crow's tree and removing a mask. Priding himself on his craftiness, the Fox plots that, when that bogus cop returns, he will arrange a nice "welcome" for him — like dumping three tons of creamed spinach on him, ho ho. Naturally (and a 5-year-old can see it coming; that's half the charm), a real policeman happens by and — whammo! — the Crow winds up living in Foxy's house, as the Fox is dragged off to the pokey by a spinach-doused minion of the law.

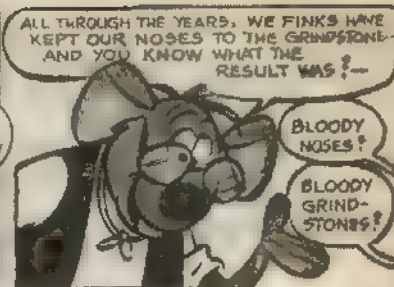

Simple? Absolutely. That's the point. You have your one crow, your one fox, your one setting. Every now and then, a foxhound or a real policeman wanders in for a panel or two, but rarely for longer than that. Amazingly, in all those stories, Davis and his collaborators never found the need to introduce a single significant supporting character. Still, their variations were infinite and very, very funny.

There are writers and artists who leave a comic after six or 12 or 20 issues feeling spent. "I've said all I have to say," they sometimes say, prompting some of us to think, "Gee, you didn't have much." There are also those, of course, who stick with a project long after they've exhausted all inspiration and are running on fumes.

I guess I'm most impressed with those who have plenty to say and never seem to run dry, and I know of no better example of this in comics history than Fox and the Crow. It wasn't Crawford Crow that had that seemingly inexhaustible supply of ideas; it was Cecil Beard and Jim Davis.

For most of its run, the DC editor assigned to The Fox and the Crow, Real Screen Comics, and Flippity and Flop was Lawrence Nadel, who seems to have left Beard and Davis largely to their own devices. They were a continent away from DC's New York offices and obviously knew their characters better than anyone else. They did, however, bother Nadel by basing too many tales, in his opinion, on food. Every so often, he would request they get off that topic for a while and then would rearrange stories among issues to spread out the inventory of food stories.

In 1958, the comics received an unexpected boost. When the MGM cartoon department closed down in '57, directors Bill Hanna and Joe Barbera made a deal with Columbia to produce a new cartoon show, expressly for television. Under the banner of Screen Gems — the same moniker Columbia had once applied to its theatrical animation outfit — Bill and Joe produced Ruff and Reddy for NBC Saturday morning. To hold down costs, the show also included cartoons from the Columbia library, primarily those of the Fox and the Crow.

Appearing on a hit Saturday morning show helped sales, and DC changed Real Screen Comics to TV Screen Cartoons and worked up a TV-screen cover format to point up the connection. But when the cartoons went off NBC, kids lost interest in the comic book. TV Screen was canceled in 1960 (after 136 issues), and Flippity and Flop ended at the same time.

The Fox and the Crow comic book continued — to slowly atrophy sales. That it was profitable at all was due mainly to the foreign market. When DC went selling their material to publishers outside the U.S., Fox and the Crow stories were among the most popular, moreso than even many of their best-selling (in America) titles. According to Davis, "We were told that someone at DC had suggested dropping the comic book because of its sales here. The foreign department exploded, saying that it would upset publishers in other countries, who might stop buying rights to other DC comics as a result."

In the mid-'60s, Larry Nadel passed away, and Murray Boltinoff assumed the editorial command of what he surely knew was a slowly sinking ship. He wanted to supervise the covers more closely, so most of them were again drawn in New York, usually by the incomparable Mort Drucker.

Soon after, DC Publisher Jack Liebowitz decided that, when DC's contract on the Columbia-owned characters expired, it would not likely warrant renewal. The decision was made to keep the comic book in print for the duration of the contract, but to attempt to develop in the back of it some DC-owned property which could, perhaps, fill the slot on their publishing schedule.

Beard and Davis were told to stop producing new stories — a decision they both greeted with mixed emotions. "Financially, Cecil and I could make more devoting that time to the animation business," Davis recalled. "But those two guys had become such a part of us by then, it was like losing two close family members."

Using the Beard-Davis backlog and some reprints, Boltinoff kept the Fox and the Crow portions of the comic book filled for the remainder of its run, while experimenting with new back-ups. The first attempt, added in issue #94, was a short-lived strip about two juvenile delinquent mice called "The Brat Finks." Created by Boltinoff, it was written variously by Bill Finger, Paul Laikin, and Arnold Drake and illustrated by Winslow Mortimer.

An issue later, Drake — who co-created The Doom Patrol and Deadman, among many other DC contributions — came up with "Stanley and His Monster." Illustrated at first by Bob Oksner and then by Winslow Mortimer, this story of a boy and his pet creature foreshadowed Bill Watterson's newspaper strip "Calvin and Hobbes" in many ways. It made for a cute story, though one that seemed out of place in a comic book called The Fox and the Crow.

The disparity was rectified a few issues later. DC allowed their rights to the Fox and the Crow to lapse, and, as of issue #109, the comic was called simply Stanley and His Monster: no fox, no crow — a sad, quiet end to one of DC's finest comics. (The kid and his monster had a good strip, too, but readers apparently didn't flock to it quickly enough. The book was canceled five issues later.)

Jim Davis labored all those years in relative obscurity, at least in comics. His work was never signed; the only way I learned his name was by writing a letter to Boltinoff and his writing back. (He later ran bios of Beard and Davis in his letters column.) In 1971, a fanzine polled its contributors and printed our lists for Favorite Comic Book, Favorite Writer, and so on. Under Favorite Humor Artist, I wrote in "Jim Davis," and the editor, unfamiliar with the man's work, assumed it was a typo-by-hand and changed it to "Jack Davis."

By then, Davis was out of comics — alas, forever — and devoting most of his energies to the animation business, though not all. He was an enterprising man. In his spare time, he designed restaurant equipment, animated electric signs, and playground equipment, and the absence of Fauntleroy and Crawford in his life afforded him more time to pursue other ventures.

In 1976, with my collection of Fox and the Crow comics still a few issues shy of completion, I made the bonehead mistake of writing an article for The Amazing World of DC Comics about the comic book, and how much I loved it. I knew the issue was out when a comic-book dealer phoned me and said, "Hey, thanks for the piece, fella. I just quadrupled my prices on all my Fox and Crow comics." When one dealer raises prices, they all raise prices, so filling in those last issues in my run became kinda expensive. (And you know what's worse? I had already made the same mistake with Sugar & Spike.)

But the article did give me an excuse to correspond with Jim Davis and with Cecil Beard. I found them to be delightful men, at least by mail, and they seemed to be genuinely pleased that their work was so remembered. Beard and his wife had retired to New Mexico, where they lived in a small cabin on an island in the middle of a lake, writing occasional comic books and children's books for Western Publishing and Disney. He passed away in December 1986.

James F. Davis continued to work off and on in animation — he was involved in some of the Bugs Bunny TV specials, for instance. We corresponded from time to time and discussed getting together, but he was always busy when I was and vice-versa.

Then, a few years ago, he turned up unexpectedly at a San Diego Comic-Con. (I think it was '94; they all seem to blur together.)

But I recall vividly someone coming up to me and saying, "Jim Davis is here and he's looking for you." At the time, I was working for another Jim Davis (the Garfield one) but I somehow instantly assumed it was the other one, the one I'd never met, and I went off in search of him.

Which was not easy.

If you've been to a San Diego con lately, you know how big that room is, and this was on a Saturday, its most crowded day, when Godzilla, Mothra, and Rodan could all show up and not spot one another. Complicating matters was that, though I was considered by some the world's foremost Fox and Crow fan and expert, I had no idea what Jim Davis looked like.

I scoured the room, eyeing the name badge of anyone who looked to be over 50, asking anyone who might know where he was. Mutual acquaintances kept saying, "Oh, yeah, Jim was here about 10 minutes ago. He said he wanted to meet you before he left. Now, where did he go —?" It went like that all afternoon.

Finally, after involving darn near everyone in the convention center, we connected and had a nice, long talk. He turned out to be — no surprise — a charming and humble gent, genuinely surprised that putative adults knew and loved his work. "We were just trying to amuse each other," he kept saying, and I suspect that's been the essential motive behind most of your great humor comics.

He was in that way typical of many men I've met of his generation — often in comics, but even moreso in animation. They entered their chosen field, never expecting to have one fan, let alone legions. It was just a nice way to make a modest living and to achieve some measure of self-satisfaction. When you finished an assignment, you didn't get a lot of money but you got some and you got the pride of having created something. The latter often mattered as much as the check.

James F. Davis probably drew something on the order of 600 Fox and Crow stories with an average length of 6 pages. So that's 3,600 pages, not counting "Flippity & Flop," "Tito & His Burrito," or "The Hound and the Hare." I just sampled a few and found that your average Fox and the Crow page contained six drawings of the Fox and seven of the Crow. So that's 21,600 Fox drawings and 25,200 of the Crow. (These are all rough surveys on my part. Why don't those danged Gallup Poll people forget about public opinion and foreign policy, and start measuring the real important stuff?)

I find all his drawings incredibly alive and funny and full of personality — and a lot less repetitious than one would expect. If you sat me down and made me draw the same character over and over and over, a certain rigor mortis would set in by around drawing #14. That it never was that way with Jim Davis goes a long way to explain why the Fox and the Crow outlived hundreds of lesser funny animal comics — and the Fox and Crow cartoons, as well.

He passed away last year, I am sad to report. He had a couple of new projects that never happened, including one that would have brought him back to the world of comics — our loss. We can always use a great cartoonist in comic books. (And it was my special loss in another way, because he wanted me to write it, and I told him I would, absolutely, with or without pay.)

But he left behind an incredible body of work: a couple hundred very funny funnybooks. I wrote these columns so I could spend a few hours re-reading a few dozen and not feel as though I was goofing off, and I found them just as amusing as ever. Even experiencing 50-some stories in one sitting, I never felt I was reading the same story twice. These days, I can't even make it through the first issues of some comics without a twinge of déjà vu.

This is the highest praise I can give a comic book: It stands the test of time. I'll bet they're still good when I'm 80. And I'll bet the Fox still hasn't wised up.

the MARVELOUS T-SHELF

By Marc Patten

Marvel is busting out all over in 1998. According to Marvel Comics Licensing Manager Nancy Volpe, Marvel has entered into an extensive licensing partnership with Bowen Designs and owner Randy Bowen to produce an ongoing series of cold cast porcelain Mini Busts of classic Marvel characters both old and new, mainstream and obscure. The busts vary in price, depending on the character. Bowen plans to release a new Mini Bust each month. The first, available now, is The Incredible Hulk. Future releases include Thor, Man Thing, and Ant-Man, the last available in June.

"Bowen Designs is also our new resin statue licensee," Volpe announced. The resin license was previously held by Bonnie Berryman's Creative License. This marks the third Marvel license for Bowen, the first being the recently produced bronze anniversary statues of The Hulk and Spider-Man and the second being the Mini Busts. Bowen said he hopes to have one or two resin statue prototypes to show at the Comic-Con International: San Diego convention this August, but the first release probably won't be avail-ble for purchase until October.

Creative License is not entirely out of the picture, according to Volpe. "It will be a licensee for pewter statues and Christmas ornaments. We're going to try to get two Christmas ornaments out this year." Berryman's company has produced ornaments in the past for Marvel. Creative License will also re-release a pewter paperweight featuring art by Jazzy John Romita.

According to Volpe, Marvel's plan to expand on the licensing potential of its classic Jack Kirby-designed 1960s monsters did not pan out. T-shirts are still being produced by Graphitti Designs under its general Marvel license, but no other merchandise or apparel is planned. Currently, Graphitti is producing a monster shirt based on a classic 1960s Marvel image.

Toon Art is producing limited-edition lithographs and litho-seriographs for the gallery market. The first releases included pieces featuring The Avengers, Silver Surfer, and Spider-Man. In July's Diamond Previews, the company will launch Toon Collectibles, matted lithographs at a much smaller size that will retail for approximately $30. The first two lithographs will feature Wolverine and Spider-Man.

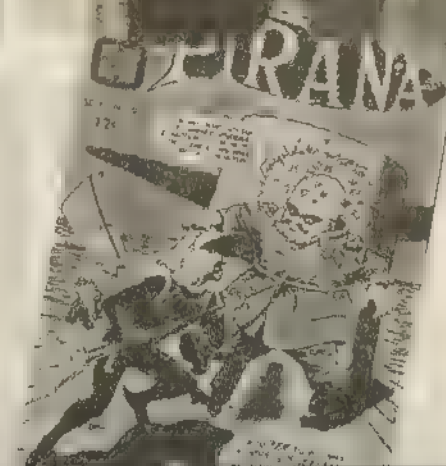

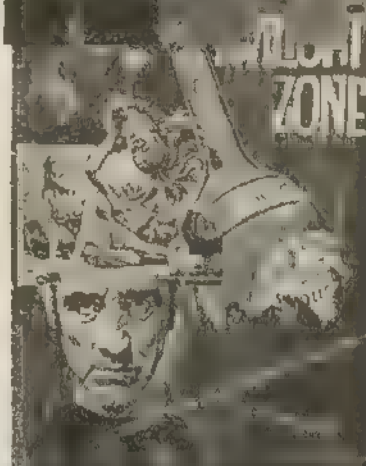

Marvel has recently hired Ken Abrams as its new vice president of licensing. Abrams will work out of a Los Angeles Marvel office to better coordinate new licensing deals. "I understand the importance of letting fans know what we're doing in the licensing business," he said.

WHO REALLY KILLED GWEN STACY?

25 years after the most shocking supporting character death in comic-book history — Spider-Man's beloved Gwen Stacy, murdered by the Green Goblin — the mystery remains...

Who really wanted Gwen dead?

Late police captain's daughter killed; Spider-Man involved

By Ben Urich, with additional analysis by J. Jonah Jameson

Gwendolyn Stacy died yesterday, an innocent victim in the latest clash between Spider-Man and The Green Goblin. Stacy, in her early 20s and single, sustained her fatal injuries when she plummeted from atop the George Washington Bridge. She is survived by her uncle, Arthur, and two cousins, Jill and Paul.

Family friend and Daily Bugle freelance photographer Peter Parker issued the following statement: 'Loved by all, known by few, she was taken too soon. She will be missed.'

Ironically, Stacy's father, Police Captain George Stacy, was likewise killed in

GWENDOLYN STACY

To say that Gwen Stacy's death rocked the comics world in 1973 is to understate matters considerably. Never before had an event created an uproar of such magnitude, ignited so many angry complaints, or caused so much righteous indignation. Even now, on the 25th anniversary of her death, the memory of her passing lingers.

The death of Gwen Stacy remains as fascinating and heart-wrenching a tale today as when it occurred. What makes the tale of her passing so fascinating? Perhaps it's because, of the six basic elements to every story, three remain unanswered, despite the passage of time.

The What, Where, and When are simple enough. Gwen's death took place atop the George Washington Bridge (although the art depicted the Brooklyn Bridge) in Spring 1973 (Amazing Spider-Man #121, Jun 73). However, despite The Green Goblin's presence in the tale and his culpability in the crime, the question "Who killed Gwen Stacy?" remains unanswered. The Goblin, after all, was merely the storyteller's contrivance, a nefarious puppet to work his will. "Of the seven men who worked directly on that fateful issue, whose idea was it to kill Gwen Stacy?" is the better, if unanswered, question.

"Why?" is another matter that has similarly gone ignored. Speculations and suspicions have accumulated over the years. Why should a woman whose destiny clearly lay at the side of Spider-Man suddenly become no more than a memory of lost love?

But, of all these unanswered questions, perhaps the greatest remains: "How?" What was it, specifically, that caused Gwen's death? Was it the horrendous impact of The Goblin's flier that propelled her off the bridge? The shock of the fall and the trauma it caused, perhaps? Or was there a monumental significance to the book's tiniest sound effect, a "Snap!" less than a quarter-inch in size, situated directly behind Gwen's head, as Spider-Man's webbing interrupted her fall? Could our hero have inadvertently snapped his beloved's neck while trying to save her life?

In the intervening years, a persistent rumor arose surrounding that sound effect. Years ago at the San Diego Comic-Con, John Romita, the issue's inker and Marvel's former art director, claimed that the "Snap!" had not been in the original script, that it had been added later by party or parties unknown. Conspiracy theorists began wondering, "Who could have done it?" The inker, perhaps, in a moment of inspiration? The writer or artist? Or might it have been an editorial concession to the almighty Comics Code Authority, an end-run around its restrictive policies?

For 25 years, three questions have gone unanswered. Thankfully, however, at this time when we commemorate her passing, the key players in Gwen's death scene are all still around. Despite the passage of years, the answers are finally within reach.

The likely suspects. Of the names mentioned in the credits, the four most likely to have had an impact on the plotting of the story are: Writer Gerry Conway, Penciller Gil Kane, Inker John Romita, and Editor Roy Thomas. The issue's letterer, Artie Simek, died in the '70s; the best resource to discover where the "Snap!" came from is, therefore, gone. Despite his passing, however, the search commences. But where to begin?

Lee's light. Stan Lee, Marvel's legendary progenitor, created Spider-Man in 1962. Despite his name being left off the credits, Lee nonetheless remained Marvel's driving force and most prominent spokesman in 1973. Whereas he might not have been privy to such seemingly mundane details as the sound effect, Lee shed some light upon the situation as it stood in 1973 and how events may have fallen into place.

"Now, my memory is bad," began Lee, "but I'm guessing when Gerry Conway took over the series, he said, 'How should I write it?' I said, 'You're the writer; do it however you want.' Gerry says that he had asked me if he could kill Gwen and that I said yes, and that may well be the case, but I don't know why I ever said yes."

The creator: What did he know and when did he know it?

asked me about it, even though I didn't like the idea, I probably would have said, 'Well, if it's something you want to do...' When I read it later on, I thought, 'Oh, my God, what the hell have we done?'"

So, according to Lee's memory, the perpetrator would have been Gerry Conway. But the motive? There, Lee had only speculation, having no memory of that specific decision being made. "Whatever the reason," said Lee, "I personally hate killing characters in comics. I don't understand the editorial thinking behind it. I had come up with these characters for a reason. Too many people in comics today ask themselves, 'What can I do to keep the readers' interest, what can I do as a surprise?' Unfortunately, the easiest answer seems to be, 'We'll kill a character.' I just feel that's the cowardly way out. It should be that we just think of more clever ideas."

Regarding the "Snap!" — Lee could remember nothing, having never heard the rumor. "I wasn't aware of that," he said. "To me, that's a little too — I don't think we have to know her neck snapped, you know what I mean? To me, the idea of this lovely girl's neck snapping: I don't feel I have to know that; it's enough for me to know she fell down and was killed, you know what I mean?"

So of the three questions, there was one lead: The decision to kill Gwen was likely Gerry Conway's. Lee mentioned that Roy Thomas, Marvel's editor in chief in 1973, would likely have a better memory of the events in question. One creator down, four to go.

Thomas' theories. Roy Thomas was the first person in history besides Stan to have written an Amazing Spider-Man story, during a brief transition period before Gerry Conway took over. When Stan moved into his position as publisher, Roy became Marvel's editor in chief. He was far more involved in Spider-Man's planning stages at this point than Stan and seemed likely to have a good indication of who might have killed Gwen.

"As editor, I wasn't as intimately involved as Gerry or John Romita," Thomas began. "Stan has always said his memory wasn't his strongest point. I say this with great respect for Stan: When people used to ask him, 'Why did you kill Gwen Stacy?' Stan

The editor:
Did he dictate the

came up with this story off the top of his head that Gerry Conway did it while Stan was out of town. It's sort of true in the sense that he may not have been paying attention. We'd all try to sneak in stuff behind his back that we thought was good, here and there, as we found our own voice. That's only natural. At the same time, the idea that the three of us together, or even separately, would have tried to sneak in the death of Gwen Stacy without Stan approving it is just so absurd ... Besides, he was never out of town that long."

So, according to Roy, Stan gave his assent. But whose idea was it, originally? "Basically it was John Romita and Gerry Conway," said Thomas, "with my approval and Stan's approval, which he sort of forgot about, because he had other things on his mind. According to the introduction Gerry wrote for the Clone Genesis trade paperback, he claims it was actually John's suggestion. I don't know. John wasn't used to coming up with the ideas that then became the actual stories, but maybe he was playing around with it and it got out of hand. All I know is we went through all the right channels. I'm sure they just convinced Stan we needed to shake things up a little bit."

"I don't know. People say they want realism in comics, but everybody has their own boundaries about where that realism starts and where it stops. People hated it. I know Gerry and Stan got the flak, and Gerry was very sensitive about it at the time, because, not only had he gone through channels, but he was very pleased with the story. He was very happy with the fact that it wasn't that she falls to her death; it was almost like Spider-Man, in saving her, snapped her neck."

Aha, now to the meat of the matter! Speaking of the "snap!" — did Roy have any memory regarding that particular sound effect? Might it have been added after the fact? And, if so, whose decision was it? "I don't recall our having to change anything in that," said Thomas. "They might have changed it without even bothering to tell me, in some cases, if it was a simple change. But in a major thing like that, I might have been involved but I still might have forgotten it. Look at the picture," Thomas advised, "and see if the story — if you changed the balloon — if you could do it with the exact same pencils or with a minor re-drawing. It might turn out that exactly the same pictures could tell both stories."

The story reads as though the "Snap!" was an afterthought. When Peter begins mourning Gwen's loss, The Goblin taunts, "Romantic idiot! She was dead before your webbing reached her! A fall from that height would kill anyone ... before they struck the ground! But for you, my friend ... death will come more quickly and more surely than the shock of a sudden fall!" It seems clear that the script's original intention was to blame Gwen's demise upon the fall itself, not its sudden interruption. Clearly, the "Snap!" must have been added later. Nonetheless, Thomas said, "It seems unlikely anybody would have done something like that without checking with me, but I don't remember. I don't think anybody would have a great reason to do this."

So of the three questions, there were two probable leads. Apparently, John Romita came up with the idea in conjunction with Gerry Conway. Why? To shake things up. And as for the "Snap!" — Thomas suggested the search should shift to the issue's artists, who would probably remember best of anyone at what point the sound effect was included.

Kane's conclusions. Gil Kane began working on Amazing Spider-Man nearly three years before Gwen's death. "Both John and Gerry were closer to what was going on, editorially," said Kane. "They were closer to the response, and I wasn't really concerned about it, one way or the other. For me, it was primarily just an assignment."

"I'll tell you frankly: This may be the 25th anniversary, but it doesn't have much significance for me. I just remember it as a work experience. I presumed at the time that it had to do with the fact that they had written themselves into a situation where they couldn't go any further with Spider-Man without changing the character, so it was just easier to get rid of the girl."

Three creators interviewed, and still only two unsubstantiated leads. Things were beginning to look bleak.

Romita's recollections. John Romita, Spider-Man's penciller for nearly 80 issues, was intimately involved in plotting the ongoing saga of Peter Parker's life and the man who inked Gwen Stacy's death. From his best recollections, whose idea was it to kill Gwen?

The artist:
Did he
erase her?

"Actually, I think Gerry and I had been talking about making a major change just to shake up the readers for several months. And it certainly worked," said Romita. "This is another 'depend-ing-on-whom-you-talk-to' story; everybody seems to remember it differently. At the time, I was under the impression that they were looking to kill a major character. At the time I remember, we were talking about Aunt May dying. I protested against it; I thought Aunt May was crucial to the premise. I then made the recommendation that it should be one of the girls — either Gwen or Mary Jane. I opted for Gwen, because I thought it would be more shocking. Mary Jane was like a passing fancy there and wouldn't be quite so shocking. So my recommendation was it should be Gwen Stacy, for the reason that it would shock me, as a reader. I felt like Gerry took a bad rap; I don't think it was Gerry's idea to kill her."

Paydirt. The first question, answered. Yet knowing who killed Gwen Stacy seemed empty, somehow, without an accompanying explanation: "Why?" Did Romita prefer Mary Jane to Gwen, perhaps? He did, after all, create the vivacious red-head, whereas Gwen was a holdover from Steve Ditko's tenure on the series. "Gwen was a lady-like, quality person, and the other one was sort of an airhead," Romita offered, surprisingly. "Stan used to accuse me of making Mary Jane a more attractive character. I used to tell him: No, even though I had created the image of

Anatomy of a murder

After being kidnapped by the Green Goblin in Amazing Spider-Man #121 (Jun 73), Gwen Stacy is taken to the top of one of the towers on the George Washington Bridge where she lies unconscious while Spider-Man and the Goblin battle. During the fight, the Goblin flies too close to the comatose Stacy, knocking her from the tower. Spider-Man shoots his webbing after her and catches her before she hits the water, in the scenes shown here.

Subsequently, Spider-Man puts Gwen's body on a dock near the bridge, where it's discovered by the police (Amazing Spider-Man #122, Jul 73) and taken away. Seeking vengeance, Spidey tracks the Goblin to one of his hideouts, where the arch-villain is apparently killed during a subsequent battle.

The scene of the crime, referred to as the George Washington Bridge in the text, but shown as the Brooklyn Bridge, is shown at right, while the "Snap!" heard throughout fandom is shown below.

"You know, when I inked it, I think the sound effect was in there, but I'm not sure. I got it after the lettering was done, so I can't swear either way."

— John Romita

"It was one of those incredible moments where art and inspiration and desperation all seemed to come together to create something memorable."

— Gerry Conway

Mary Jane, my favorite character was the more lady-like Gwen."

So Gwen was Romita's favorite but it was his suggestion to kill her? "It's funny, but, even though I say the character was my favorite, I never lost track of the fact that they were characters to be juggled around in the strip," said Romita. "When I say she was my favorite character, it wasn't that I was under the assumption she was real. [Laughter.] I would care about these characters and I would act as though they were real, but I figured that was part of my job: treat them the way a director and an actor would be expected to do it. So, as a director, I got to believe in these characters very much — and care."

"I always tell this story in connection with Gwen, because, when I was balloons. At that stage, it was quite possible that it was added, and I'll tell you something: That's not an uncommon thing. When we did it this way, the drawings created a lot of subtleties that were never envisioned. It's certainly not impossible that the emotion grabbed Gerry when he saw the artwork."

At last, a solid lead, something more than mere speculation. Gerry Conway may have done the deed, in more ways than one. Romita cast his memory back to verify, if possible, whether the "Snap!" was on the page when he inked it. "You know, when I inked it, I think the sound effect was in there, but I'm not sure," said Romita. "I got it after the lettering was done, so I can't swear either way. It probably was in there. On the other hand, it could have been added. It adds another bit of mystery to it. It's a crazy twist on a twist."

Before recommending verification of his speculations from Conway, Romita offered a few parting words of sadness and regret at Gwen's passing. "I was fully aware that it was going to be an important character that was missing," said Romita, "but I was going about my business and not thinking about the ramifications. A character like that, to be remembered after all these years, is a wonderful thing."

Conway's confession. "I did it," Conway began, upon hearing the "Snap!" rumor. "It was my fault or my credit, one or the other." And, just like that, all questions were apparently answered.

"You have to understand how Marvel scripts at that time were developed," Conway continued. "The procedure was: The writer would develop a story, the story would be written out in more or less detail, and you might include some dialogue, but mostly you're just giving the beats of the story. The artist draws it, and the writer comes along and writes the dialogue and adds any sound effects or special effects that might be required for the script."

"So, yes, the 'Snap!' was not in the original outline, but it was in the script that I produced off of Gil's art. I think the reason I put it in — there were probably two basic reasons. The first was, looking at the artwork, it seemed to me it needed something at that moment."

"The second was, on some subliminal level, I knew what the theme of the story was going to be and discovered that theme as it was being written, the theme being an extension of the original 'With great power comes great responsibility.' But the flipside of that is: You are responsible for everything — that, even being a hero, you can't save everyone, and the very attempt to do so may in fact cause the disaster you're trying to avoid. It was kind of an existential view. It was in the script but it wasn't in the original outline, although it might have been inherent in the original outline."

Despite Romita's speculation that Gwen's death was intended to shake readers out of any feelings of complacency, Conway offered a very different reason for the events of issue #121. "Gwen Stacy to me had always seemed like a bad afterthought," said Conway. "She was certainly the least interesting of Peter's first four girlfriends. I always thought Gwen Stacy just didn't have anything to recommend her as a girlfriend. Gwen was introduced in issue #31, then I bumped her off in #121, so she was around for about 90 issues. Now, not to criticize the work, but it was not very memorable stuff, to my mind. I was a Mary Jane partisan. As far as I was concerned, between the two, there really wasn't much choice. I just wanted to write a story that would enable me to make Mary Jane Peter's main squeeze."

"It was one of those incredible moments where art and inspiration and desperation all seemed to come together to create something memorable."

Part of the problem in understanding comics, I think, is realizing most of this is done by the seat of their pants by guys who are trying to meet a deadline and not really thinking about what the full repercussions are going to be a year or two down the line, which gives it its charm but also makes it kind of chaotic to go back and interpolate what was really intended by all of these types of changes."

Conclusions. Despite the hazards of trying to re-create a moment 25 years later, the following conclusions now appear accurate:

- Gerry Conway killed Gwen Stacy, but at John Romita's initial suggestion.

- Whereas Romita believed it was done to shake readers out of their complacency, Conway nonetheless maintains he did it because he never cared for Gwen and wanted to make Mary Jane Peter's love interest.

- Conway added the "Snap!"

The fan response. The facts concerning Gwen Stacy's death are all accounted for, yet it's never enough to merely say someone lived or someone died. Much more important is what kind of impact they made upon others — and, on that front, Gwen Stacy has no peer.

Gwen's death created a tidal wave of fan uproar. "People were threatening Gerry's life," Romita recalled.

"Gerry got letters calling him a murderer, and Stan was probably called the same thing," offered Thom-

Conway bore the brunt of the attack, and, since he was handling the letters column at the time, he saw the fan's response first-hand. Only three of the angry letters ever saw print; one began "Dear Cruda," another accused everyone involved of "First Degree Murder!" while the last suggested throwing Conway off the George Washington Bridge to see if the fall would kill him before impact. "I have to say, it really made my professional career in comics unpleasant for a number of years," said Conway, a master of understatement.

For his part, Romita said he saw the response as a positive thing. "I certainly was touched by the reaction of the readers, because that, to me, I felt was a compliment to the series," said Romita. "It's such a wonderful tribute to the structure of the series, the buildup of the story to a point where people care so much."

Perhaps even greater than the fans' response was the impact Gwen's death had upon the comics world in general. In many ways, the issue marked the end of the innocence, not merely in Peter's life, but for comics in general.

"I think there's a lot of truth to that," Lee said. "There was a sort of innocence about reading comics. You knew the characters would never die, you never had to worry that much. Suddenly, the readers were faced with the notion that, yes, the people who are important to us in the story can die."

Second-guessing seems inevitable, even for the men associated with the death of Gwen Stacy.

"I could have said 'No' at the beginning," said Thomas. "I could have said 'No' and squelched it, but my feeling was: 'Let's think about it; let's consider it.' Once it got considered, we just did it, and it was only later that we realized success has many fathers and failure is an orphan — and, although this wasn't really a failure, it seems like an orphan, anyway."

Looking back, would Roy have reacted differently? "Well, if Stan approved it and if Gerry and John wanted to do it, I'd say I can't see any reason not to. I don't think there's anything really inevitable about these things. Would Spider-Man be a better or worse series now, because of it? In the long run, it wouldn't have made a difference, because somebody else would have killed somebody else. In the long run, when it all washed out in the end, the series would be different today, but it would not be necessarily better or worse."

Dateline:G!!!★

by FRED HEMBECK

BACK IN 1972, FRESH FROM THE SUCCESS OF HIS FIRST TWO VOLUMES OF THE SPIDER-MAN HISTORY OF COMICS, THE MARVEL GUIDES, I GOT TO BE INVOLVED INTO PUBLISHING WITH A 6/72 TABLOID NEWSLETTER DEVOTED TO THE FIELD OF COMICS, APPROPRIATELY ENTITLED "COMIXSCENE" (WHICH WOULD SOON EVOLVE INTO "MEDIASCENE," THEN "MEDIASCENE PREVIEW," AND, FINALLY, JUST "PREVIEW," BUT THAT'S A STORY FOR ANOTHER DAY.)

A QUARTER CENTURY AGO, IN "AMAZING SPIDER-MAN" #121, THE LOVE OF PETER PARKER'S LIFE, GWEN STACY, WAS RUTHLESSLY MURDERED.

MOST FOLKS, BLAMED SPIDER-MAN'S ARCH-ENEMY, THE GREEN GOBLIN, OTHER MORE CHIVALROUS READERS, PLACED THE RESPONSIBILITY SQUARELY ON WRITER GERRY CONWAY'S SHOULDERS.

ME? WELL, I'VE ALWAYS SORTA ASSOCIATED JIM STERANKO WITH THE DEATH OF GWEN STACY, WHICH I'M GLAD YOU ASKED...

STERANKO WAS LIKE LNT0 A GOD TO ME IN THOSE DAYS (HEY - HE STILL IS!), SO I EAGERLY SUBSCRIBED AFTER RECEIVING A COMPLIMENTARY COPY OF THE DEBUT ISSUE, "COMIXSCENE" #2 - DATED JAN/FEB 1973, BUT ARRIVING AT LEAST A MONTH EARLIER IN MY MAIL BOX - TRUMPETED WHAT HAD TO BE THE BIGGEST STORY TO HIT COMICS IN OVER A DECADE:

SHAZAM! WITH ONE MAGICAL WORD, DC HAD RESURRECTED PERHAPS THE GREATEST HERO OF THE GOLDEN AGE OF COMICS, AND THEY HAD CAPTAIN MARVEL'S CO-CREATOR, C.C. BECK, ON BOARD FOR THE RELAUNCH! NOW? NOW, THAT WAS GONNA BE SOMETHING!

AFTER HAPPILY PERUSING EXTENSIVE COVERAGE OF THE GOOD CAPTAIN'S RETURN, I EVENTUALLY MOVED ON TO THE REMAINDER OF THE MAGAZINE.

ENCOUNTERING A PAGE OF MARVEL NEWS, I DISCOVERED THE FEATURE ITEM TO BE CONCERNED WITH THE START-UP OF THEIR BLACK AND WHITE HORROR MAGAZINE, I.N.C. FOLLOWING SEVERAL OTHER STAFF TID-BITS, I FIND MYSELF BLIND-SIDED BY THIS ITEM, MARKING UNCONSCIOUSLY IN THE FOURTH COLUMN:

"A TRAGEDY THAT WILL HAVE LONG TERM EFFECTS ON THE AMAZING ARACHNID'S LIFE BEFALLS SPIDER-MAN IN AN UPCOMING ISSUE OF THE MARVEL COMICS SERIES."

"IN A SHOCKING SERIES OF DEVELOPMENTS, BOTH GWEN STACY AND THE GREEN GOBLIN WILL BE KILLED OFF IN AN UPCOMING ISSUE OF SPIDER-MAN. AUNT MAY, HOWEVER, REMAINS INTACT AND WILL PROBABLY OUTLIVE THEM ALL."

CHEAP JOKE ASIDE, I DID SIT THERE IN SHOCK! A FAITHFUL READER SINCE THE FIRST ISSUE TEN YEARS EARLIER, HERE I LEARNED ABOUT THE SINGLE MOST DRAMATIC EVENT IN THE WEB-SLINGER'S CAREER BY WAY OF A MATTER-OF-FACT ANNOUNCEMENT-- MONTHS BEFORE THE ACTUAL STORY HIT THE STANDS IN MARCH OF '73...

--WOULD IT'VE KILLED THEM TO'VE REPORTED THE NEWS MORE LIKE THAT? DID THEY REALLY NEED TO RUIN WHAT LITTLE SUSPENSE WE READERS MIGHT'VE GOTTEN FROM FOLLOWING THIS STORYLINE??

Geez. IMAGINE IF STERANKO HAD BEEN PUBL. SH. NO "PREVIEW" BACK WHEN ORSON WELLES CAME OUT WITH HIS "WAR OF THE WORLDS" BROADCAST? MASS HYSTERIA COULD'VE BEEN AVOIDED SIMPLY BY LETTING JIM DO ONE OF HIS PREVIEWS!

NOW, I REALIZE THAT, IN ALL PROBABILITY, JIM DIDN'T PERSONALLY WRITE THAT GWEN STACY ITEM. THE PAGE WAS AFTER ALL, MARGINED - BUT AS EDITOR AND PUBLISHER, HE SURE AS HELL APPROVED IT. THE ODD THING IS, ALL THESE YEARS LATER, I STILL RECALL MY REACTION TO HIS REPORTAGE OF THE EVENT MORE CLEARLY THAN I DO TO READING THE ACTUAL, SANTI-CLIMATIC, STORY.

SO, FOR THE PURPOSES OF THIS PIECE, I REREAD THE TWO-PART EPIC, AND FOLKS, I GOTTA TELL YA, THE WAY THE DEATH OF GWEN STACY ACTUALLY TRANSPIRES, WELL, IT'S PRETTY LAME. WHEN OUR HERO FINDS HER, SHE'S ON TOP OF THE GEORGE WASHINGTON BRIDGE - COURTESY OF THE GREEN GOBLIN - AND ALREADY IN A STATE OF SHOCK. THAT'S STRIKE ONE - NO DRAMATIC FAREWELL SPEECH OR EVEN MUMBLED LAST WORDS FOR THE DOOMED GWEN.

WHEN THE EMERALD-ATTIRED NORMAN OSBORN KNOCKS HER FROM HER PERCH, SPIDER-MAN DESPERATELY ATTEMPTS TO CATCH HER WITH HIS WEBBING AND, WHEN HE SUCCEEDS, HAPPILY FEELS HER UP TO SAFETY --OR SO HE THINKS. Y'SEE, SHE'S ALREADY GONE BECAUSE, AS THE GOBLIN INFORMS THE SHOCKED WEBHEAD, "SHE WAS DEAD BEFORE YOUR WEBBING REACHED HER. A FALL FROM THAT HEIGHT WOULD KILL ANYONE -- BEFORE THEY STRUCK THE GROUND!" (STRIKE TWO.)

WELL, I KNOW, IN THE ENTIRE HISTORY OF COMICS, I NEVER HAD BEFORE, AND I'M REASONABLY CERTAIN, I HAVEN'T SINCE (JNL. EES, OF COURSE, IT WAS IN A VERTIGO BOOK). Y'SEE, THE RULE IS, SUPPORTING CHARACTER FALLS, HERO PREVENTS SAID NON-QUAL FROM PERSONALLY GREETING THE GROUND, AND, VOILA! SUPPORTING CHARACTER LIVES! SLIPPERY, N THE PANEL WHERE SPIDER-MAN SNARES GWEN'S LEG AND STOPS HER FALL, THERE'S A "SNAP" SOUND EFFECT BY HER HEAD, BUT THE GOBLIN (AND MAYBE MARVEL BOWNES WITH COLD FEET?) QUICKLY ABOLISHES MS. STACY'S BOYFRIEND OF ANY NOTION THAT HE MIGHT'VE FATAALLY SWAPPED HER NECK BY WAY OF THE AFORE-RELATED SPEECH, DESPITE THE DISTURBING SOUND EFFECT. THE MATTER IS NEVER AGAIN BROACHED. JIM WH. IT WAS THE FALL THAT KILLED HER. MAKES YOU WONDER HOW POOR LOIS LANE EVER LASTED THIS LONG?..

THE GREEN GOBLIN BEING IMPAIRED - CRUCIFIED, ACTUALLY - BY HIS OWN DEVICES THE FOLLOWING MONTH WAS SLIGHTLY MORE SATISFYING, BUT MARVEL EVEN WENT AND RUINED THAT -- STRIKE THREE, YER OUT! -- THOUGH IT TOOK 'EM ALMOST 23 YEARS TO GET AROUND TO IT.

DESPERATELY TRYING TO D.G. THEMSELVES OUT FROM UNDER THAT PROTRACTED CLONE IMBROGLIO OF THE MID-NINETIES, THEY SCRAMBLED FOR A BOWT ON THAT MIGHT MAKE SOME SENSE BY ATTRIBUTING THE ENTIRE MIXED-UP SCHEME TO A MIRACULOUSLY REBORN NORMAN OSBORN, THUS CLEANING UP ONE MESS WHILE CREATING ANOTHER, POTENTIALLY MORE TROUBLING, ONE.

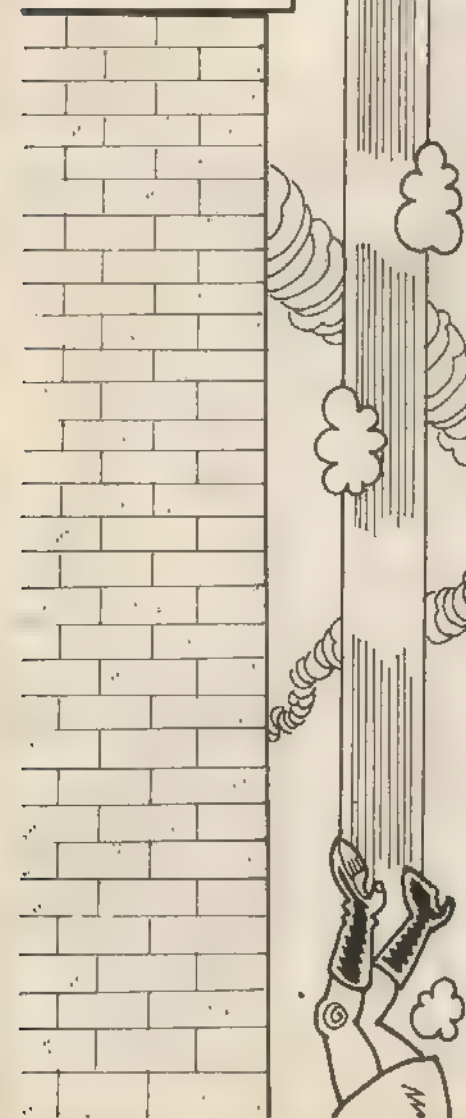

THINK ABOUT IT -- OSBORN! ALIVE ALL THESE YEARS? THAT'S HOT ON THE WHEELS OF THE NEWSFLASH THAT AUNT MAY KNEW HER NEPHEW'S SECRET FOR QUITE A WHILE - AND LET'S NOT FORGET MARY JANE -- SHE WAS AWARE OF PETER'S DOUBLE LIFE ALMOST SINCE DAY ONE -- WHAT'S NEXT? FLASH THOMPSON REVEALED TO BE THE LOVE CHILD OF MARY PARKER AND DOC OCK??

AT LEAST, BY THE TIME THE GOBLIN'S REVIVAL WAS BROADCAST THROUGHOUT THE FAN PRESS, I WAS PRETTY MUCH BEYOND CARING. CAN'T BLAME JAUNT'S JIM FOR THIS ONE.

ADMITTEDLY, I NEVER MUCH CARED FOR GWEN STACY, ANYWAY -- OR MARY JANE WATSON, EITHER, FOR THAT MATTER. I'M STRICTLY A BETTIE BRANT FAN FROM WAY BACK THEN, GUYS -- PLEASE DON'T KILL HER, OKAY?

BUT IF YOU DO, JUST DON'T TELL STERANKO...

AND LET'S JUST BE THANKFUL HE DIDN'T HAVE THE OPPORTUNITY TO REVEAL THE TRUE NATURE OF "TITANIC"...

"I can't get over you being a closet comic-book collector!"

— Mary Jane Watson-Parker to husband Peter, in the Amazing Spider-Man newspaper strip (April 9, 1998)

Wanna know what to expect when Marvel re-launches the Spider-Man titles for the late '90s?

- Spider-sense mostly tingles when Cody is about to say something cute.

- Those &^%$#@ electronic spider tracers die unless you give them proper care and feeding.

- Spidey's motto: "With great power there comes $13 million an episode."

- Peter winds up marrying Gwen, because a department-store chain thinks "Mary Jane" is too blatant an endorsement for marijuana.

- Instead of heroically freeing himself from tons of wreckage (while fighting The Master Planner), Spidey "out-sources" the task.

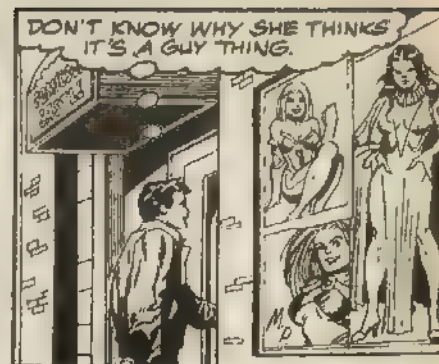

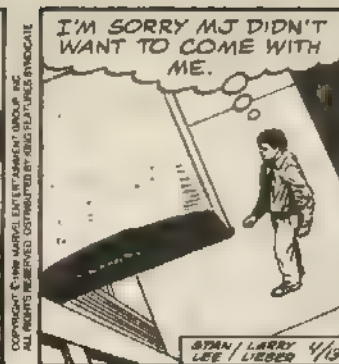

- Peter Parker sues the radioactive spider for slander when it dies after taking a bite of him.

- New theme song: "Is he strong? Listen, Bud-wei-ser ..."

- The Carnage costume is ashamed to show itself in public after learning it came from a sweatshop.

These changes probably come none too soon. Next month, Norman Osborn is supposed to team up with Thomas and Martha Wayne, Norman Bates' mother, Bambi's mother —

THE AMAZING SPIDER-MAN

Ingersoll, but it was only those two that got my own hard-earned cash.

By contrast, my May order includes: Avengers, Captain America, Heroes for Hire, Incredible Hulk, Iron Fist, Iron Man, Made Men trade paperback, Marvel Universe, Shadows and Light, Spider-Man: The Manga, Thor, Thunderbolts, and X-Men: The Manga. And, lately, I'm also bumming a lot more Marvel titles off Ingersoll.

I believe Marvel, in terms of quality, is on the upswing once more. Oh, there are still bumps in the road. In the category of wrong-headed decisions, I would rate pretty high up on the list turning The Hulk back into the old "Hulk smash" incarnation and losing writer Peter David in the process. I'll likely drop the title with Peter's last issue. But, on the whole, I think Marvel's comics are stronger today than they were at this time last year.

(Digression. Spare me the "it's unfair not to give The Hulk's new writer or writers a chance" routine. It's my two bucks and I was more than willing to fork it over every month as long as I was got what I wanted, which was the Peter David version of The Hulk. If the ice-cream stand is out of vanilla, I don't order chocolate in some fool attempt to be "fair" to the manager who didn't stock vanilla. I take my money to the ice-cream stand down the street or, in this case, Peter's next project. End digression.)

Moving right along —

Thunderbolts is one of my favorite Marvel titles. Writer Kurt Busiek came up with a brilliant concept: super-villains posing as super-heroes and (some of them) discovering they liked being on the other side. It's quite possibly the only good thing that came out of Onslaught and Heroes Reborn.

With the return of those heroes who had been banished from the Marvel Universe, Thunderbolts has become even more interesting for the "neo-heroes" and their readers. Their criminal pasts exposed, the T-Bolts are wanted by the entire world, this despite their key role in preventing their leader, Baron Zemo, from conquering said entire world. As you might imagine, Zemo isn't awfully thrilled with them, either, a sentiment shared by the various criminals they defeated while their cover was still intact. Add to this scenario the additional complication that one of the "heroic" T-Bolts isn't any more trustworthy than Zemo and you have a series bursting with action, human interest, and suspense.

In addition to Busiek's fine writing, Thunderbolts has solid art by penciller Mark Bagley with inkers Vince Russell and Scott Hanna. It's edited by Tom Brevoort, one of Marvel's best and most popular editors. It's a great comic book. Check it out.

It's not published by Marvel Comics, but older readers should also check out Bob Fingerman's Minimum Wage (Fantagraphics, $2.95). For me, discovering this title was one of the major perks of being an Eisner Awards judge last year. I hadn't read the series before that gig and, afterwards, I couldn't get enough of it.

Minimum Wage concerns itself with cartoonist Rob Hoffman and his fiancée Sylvie Fanucci, as they look for a new apartment, move to a new apartment, spend a weekend at the beach with Sylvie's brother and his family, face an unwanted pregnancy, attend a comics convention, have an argument over a possible collaborator of Rob's, go to funerals (one from each of their families), and deal with all sorts of other real-life situations.

Fingerman has done an amazing job bringing these characters to life and making me like them. His stories are told with honesty, really drawing me into Rob's and Sylvie's world, while his detailed art makes me believe in that world. If I were a TV executive, I'd snap up the option on this series faster than Jerry Springer would sign up a 300-pound Nazi transvestite who's fathered a child with his brother. I think these young lovers would win the hearts of America with their first airing. However, since I'm not a TV executive, I'll have to be content with buying Minimum Wage as long as Fingerman keeps writing and drawing it.

Sadly, that may not be much longer. The series sells around 3,000 copies an issue, which is a good working definition of "labor of love." That's a shame, because it's a great comic book which, like its creator, deserves a wider audience.

This is where, I hope, you're thinking, "Hey, Tony's turned me on to lots of good comics in the past; I'm going to give this one a chance, too." That's good thinking. Act on it.

OK, let's get back to that closet comics-collecting fiend, Peter Parker.

In one of last year's Spider-Man comics, it was revealed that young Petey collected Journey into Mystery and other pre-hero Marvel titles, but it hadn't appeared that he was still buying comics as an adult. Presumably, as the current newspaper continuity rolls along, we'll find out more about his current tastes in comic books. I wonder if Stan will name names.

I also find myself wondering what comic books other strip characters would read and enjoy. We have seen characters reading comics in such strips as Beetle Bailey, Fox Trot, Funky Winkerbean, and Hi and Lois. But, what about the others?

Would Mary Worth kick back with

Betty and Veronica or Cherry and Omaha?

Would Charlie Brown read Casper or Our Fighting Forces?

Would Mike Doonesbury relax with Legends of the Dark Knight or Maison Ikkoku?

To be honest, I don't know. However, I do know that, should my readers start sending me their guesses and explanations as to which comic-strip characters would read which comics and why those characters would read those comics, it's pretty gosh-darned likely I would run those comments in a future Tips.

I'll see you next week.

Tony Isabella, "America's most-beloved comic-book writer and columnist," will be a guest at Marcon 33, which will be held Friday, May 1, through Sunday, May 3, at the Hyatt Regency in beautiful downtown Columbus, Ohio. This is one of the most enjoyable fantasy and science-fiction conventions around, with great guests, a full program of events, and a terrific dealers' area. CBG columnist Bob Ingersoll will attend, and living legend Julius Schwartz is a special Guest of Honor. On the non-comics end of things, Marcon's Guest of Honor is author Lois McMaster Bujold. Our tip to anyone thinking of attending: Come early, stay all three days, and have a wonderful time! See you there!

Mignola goes to the movies

Disney animated feature and Hellboy movie are in the works

By Rob Allstetter

He's got a studio. He's got a script he likes. But writer-artist Mike Mignola said he's extremely cautious about the Hellboy live-action movie in development at Universal Pictures. "Ninety percent of this stuff never gets made, and, when the stuff gets made, it changes radically," Mignola said. "Should we defy all the odds and get the movie made, it could still wind up radically different from where it is now."

Mignola has just received the latest version of the Hellboy script, written by Peter Briggs. Universal's current option on Hellboy will expire in about nine months, and Mignola said that, if the movie will get made, he's expecting to see some movement soon. "The writer came out, visited me for a couple of days, and really picked my brain. He wanted to squeeze as many of the elements of the mini-series into the movie as possible. From what I've seen, it's really faithful to the comic book without being a straight adaptation of one mini-series."

Mignola said his involvement with the film has been minimal. "I had one meeting with the Universal people, who were big fans of the comics and wanted to find a way to translate the comic book to the screen. There are so many people and so much money involved in getting a movie made, I could drop everything in my life and try to usher this thing through the Hollywood system, and it's still not gonna be made. And then I'm out three years of my life."

Mignola's ideal choice for Hellboy? "Give me Bruce Willis. He's this guy who gets beat up a lot but is an action guy, not the Arnold Schwarzenegger type. But, somehow, when the character is a guy who jumps into a red suit or red makeup or whatever, it becomes silly to use that big of a name."

In addition to Hellboy, Mignola continues to work in animation. He did some designs of Gotham City's high society for the upcoming Batman Tomorrow series on Kids' WB and is working on Atlantis, a feature film for Disney, targeted for 2000 or 2001.

"Theoretically, the film will have my kind of style," Mignola said. "Much the way a particular illustrator's style was used for Hercules, they want to apply my style to Atlantis."

Mignola couldn't reveal much about Atlantis but described it as more action-adventure than most Disney films. "It's a big monster movie," he said.

Inkworks announces

'Buffy the Vampire Slayer,' 'Small Soldiers,' 'Alien Legacy'

"Small Soldiers," a Dreamworks motion picture which features two groups of action figures that come to life and have a war, will be showcased on a card set by Inkworks in late June/early July.

"We're the only company pursuing new movie titles and we've got three marquee movies - 'Lost in Space,' 'Godzilla' and 'Small Soldiers.' We're very happy with that," said Inkworks' Greg Goldstein.

Also on Inkworks' docket are card sets based on the WB Network's "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" (late August/early September release) and "Alien Legacy," which is based on all four "Alien" movies. The first Alien series is scheduled for late 1998, with a second series planned for early 1999.

Godzilla: The Movie

The upcoming "Godzilla" card set will feature a first for Inkworks – oversized cards. Originally announced as an 81-card set, the series will now feature 72 cards produced in the Superview format that measure the same as Topps' Star Wars and X-Files Showcase Widevision cards (4.7 x 2.5 inches).

"The imagery just called for more space," Inkworks' Greg Goldstein said. "It's a big creature in a big movie with lots of things going on. When we started fooling around with the cards to see what they would look like in the larger format, it just made sense."

Set size: 72 cards; Pack price: 5 cards/$1.79; Ship date: May

INSERTS

Etched Glow-in-the-Dark: 6 cards of Godzilla; Insertion ratio (1:17)

Godzilla Silver: 4 cards; Insertion ratio (1:24)

Godzilla Supreme: 1 card (with reptile-like finish); Insertion ratio (1:108)

Small Soldiers

The upcoming live-action motion picture features action figures that have a military computer chip installed by mistake, which gives them the ability to think and learn.

They quickly realize their toy guns are plastic, so they rummage through the house looking for other items – propane tanks, cheese graters, toasters and other weapons to war against the Gorgonites.

When the soldiers see the Gorgonites went home with the humans, they assume the humans are allies, and the war begins against both the Gorgonites and the humans.

Phil Hartman of "News Radio" and formerly of "Saturday Night Live," Jay Mohr ("Jerry Maguire" and "SNL") and Kirsten Dunst ("ER") star in the movie.

Quantum Leap: Comparing original entertainment sets with their reincarnated cousins

By Kurt Samuels

Instead of taking a step forward or to the left or the right, card companies have taken steps back to come up with new licenses for the entertainment card market.

Card companies are taking many of these older sets and doing such a make over that even Courtney Love would be amazed.

Gone are the quirks and silly cutlines that made their cardboard cousins unique.

In are facts, figures and gold-foil stamping that makes the information generation slobber in excitement.

Who's better? Who's best? Like the owl in the Tootsie Pop commercial says, "Let's find out."

Keep in mind, we only compared entertainment sets which focused only on one TV show, movie or rock group. Inkworks' TV's Coolest Classics featured five shows in one set. We have included that set as its own entity at the end of the story.

The Beatles

Old: Topps, 1964, seven total series

New: The River Group, 1993-94, four total series

Newest: Sports Time, 1997, one series.

In 1964, Topps produced 399 Beatles cards in seven different series (only 200 cards less than the company's baseball set of that year) and Beatles fans went nuts and bought them all.

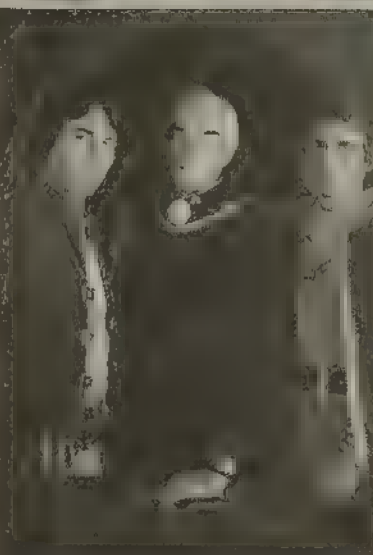

In 1993 and 1994, TRG produced 288 total cards and Beatles fans bought most of them.

In 1997, Sports Time produced 131 total cards and few people bought them.

While the Topps series had more, it wasn't necessarily better, at least in the hard-core Beatles fans' perspective.

The TRG set, because it was a retrospective set, encompassed the band's entire career.

But for the fun of that era, the 1978 Battlestar Galactica 1996

Old: Topps 1978; New: Dart Flipcards 1996 If there is anything that can be learned from Battlestar Galactica, it is that sci-fi geeks will purchase anything produced on cardboard (or in Dart's case, Mirrorboard). Topps' series of Battlestar Galactica featured 132 cards with 22 stickers (the best chase card ever made) and features better screen grabs than the Dart version. The Dart set features more items that are cool to hard-core BG fans (schematic drawings of the Battlestar and artwork from Frank Frazetta). Either set, however, is only worthy to those who are fans of this limited show 1964 set captures the Beatles hey-day like no other.

him, not as the donut-chomping fat guy in a tacky white jumpsuit.

Elvis Presley

Old: Topps 1956

New: Donruss 1978

Newest: The River Group 1992-93

The River Group set was just too much (like Elvis in the 1970s) with 750 total cards

The Donruss series was just a cheap series to capture the wallets of grieving fans.

The 1956 series is an easy choice as the top set because it features Presley the way we want to remember

Empire Strikes Back

Old: Topps 1980

New: Topps 1995

The benefit of these "looking back" sets is that they can expand on the subject in way that wasn't allowed the first time when producing the sets, whether it was due to time or content restraints placed by the studio or whomever held the license.

While the first Empire Strikes Back series (like Return of the Jedi and Star Wars) did a good job in showing scenes from the film, it didn't have the ability to find never-before-seen footage or a chance to speak with the people producing the film to add beef to the set.

OLD SET

1978 Beverly Hillbillies 1996

ESB fans may not like this, but the later series is without a doubt one of the best Star Wars sets ever produced.

King Kong

Old: Donruss, 1965

Old: Topps, 1965 (test)

New: Eclipse, 1993

Featuring the original King Kong film (a 1978 Topps King Kong set was released but didn't feature the same film), these three series are unique in their approach to the film.

The Topps set stuck with the original story line from the film. Donruss went with the funny captions.

Eclipse went back to the story line, but was more in detail than the Topps set. For Kong fans, there is really only one choice: Eclipse set.

The Topps set, which was released as a test issue, sells for more than $7,000.

The Donruss set is "only" $400, but is not worthy unless you're a diehard Kong fan.

KISS

Old: Donruss 1978

New: Cornerstone 1997

You know when a band works this hard, it's worth a deuce.

The Donruss series (two total plus

NEW SET

Old: Topps, 1963; New: Eclipse, 1993

This is not such an even comparison because the Eclipse version also contains scenes from the terrible movie remake in 1993. But even without those cards, the original is by far superior, because of the "Hillbilly Gag" on each card back.

additional cards) gave KISS fans some cool concert photos not seen in rock mags or other places, but it lacked any type of information on the band.

Cornerstone came to fill the void but, like KISS after Ace Frehley left the band, didn't have the same magic.

The best bet is to either combine the two versions or to purchase the Donruss set and buy the book, KISS and Sell.

Monkees

Old: Donruss 1966-67

New: Cornerstone 1995

Unlike the KISS set, Cornerstone landed a knockout with their version of Monkees cards.

By producing both an episode guide for the TV shows and some information on the band itself, the series is one of the better nostalgia update sets produced.

Unless there are hard-core Monkees fans out there (like Marcia Brady), go with the Cornerstone version instead.

Munsters

Old: Leaf 1964

New: Dart 1996

The 1964 Leaf series is classic 1960s entertainment cards: large black-and-white screen grabs with a silly caption in front and another joke on the back.

The Dart set is classic 1990s; using photos that are superimposed over a mirrorboard background. The backs highlight this set with cool information and trivia.

If a collector could combine the Leaf card fronts with the Dart backs, this might be a very good set.

Rocky Horror Picture Show

Old: FTCC 1980

New: Comic Images 1995

Talk about a little late with an idea, but FTCC released its series five years after the movie first debuted.

Comic Images tried 20 years later but produced what could be the biggest dud ever made.

Neither set is worth the cardboard it's printed on. Instead go to a midnight showing of the movie and buy the soundtrack. Stay away from the cards.

Return of the Jedi

Old: Topps 1993

New: Topps 1995

See "Empire Strikes Back."

Star Trek (TV)

Old: Leaf 1967

New: Fleer/SkyBox 1997 Star Trek: The Original Series

Trek fans love the Fleer/SkyBox series because it's something that honors the show in a proper light.

The rest of America (if they have ever seen this set, that is) would love the 1967 version because it is so whacked out that there are few things ever seen in trading cards that have been funnier or more entertaining.

The original 1967 series (or the reprint of it) should be in everyone's collection.

However, the Fleer/SkyBox Original Series the 1997 set and with two series scheduled for 1998 - is a high-quality set containing photos from the original master film. The autographs also make this set a winner.

Star Wars

Old: Topps 1977

New: Topps 1995 (widevision)

The five series of 1977 cards fore-shadows the current state of Star Wars cards: after so many cards being produced, Topps has nothing left to feature.

In the 1977 version, the company was looking for anything new to show in the set that it is rumored that George Lucas' baby photos were almost put in. OK maybe not.

But the new Star Wars card series

(from 1993 on) were in the same predicament.

Both series went on far longer than they had to. Luckily, a new film will be out soon and these cards can now take a rest.

Three Stooges

Old: Fleer 1959

New: Fleer 1965

Newer: FTCC 1985

Newest: DuoCards 1997

All these sets have their high and low points, but the series that is pretty much avoided by collectors is the 1965 set. The reason: No Curly.

The others have Curly, thus you should buy them. Now.

Nostalgic TV

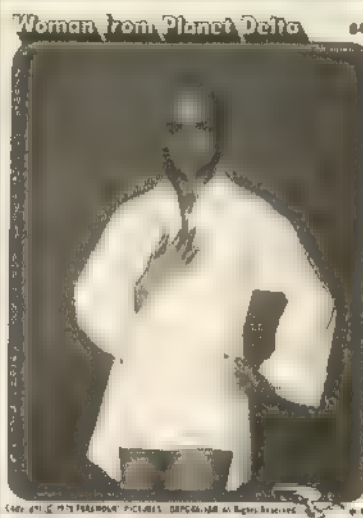

Old: Fleer Hogan's Heroes 1965, Topps Get Smart 1966, Topps Brady Bunch 1969 and Pacific Andy Griffith 1990-91

New: Inkworks TV's Coolest Classics, 1998

There's no doubt the original sets are favorites among Baby Boomers. That led to a no-brainer decision for Inkworks to bunch all of these sets together - in addition to "The Beverly Hillbillies" - for its set.

Autographed cards and interesting information about the shows on the

NEW SET

Old: Topps (I) 1979; FTCC (II-IV) 1983-87; New: SkyBox Cinema Collection I-IV 1994.

Topps and FTCC did what they could with the limited access they had with the Star Trek movie licenses.

But other than screen shots, none really stand out. SkyBox did a masterful job with the Cinema Collection series which highlighted the first six Star Trek films (72 cards per film per series) in a "widevision" format.

But because the cards were sold mainly through mail-order, few people have the set.

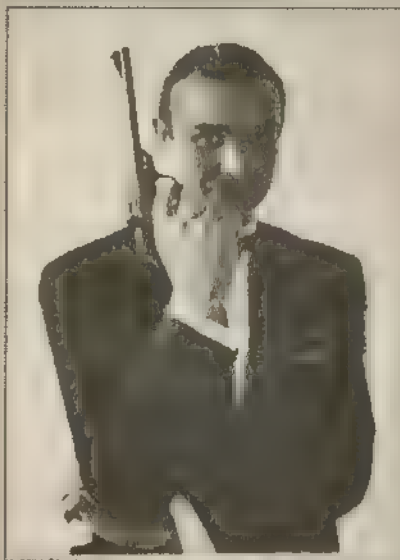

Now they are quite scarce to find on the retail market. They are a must for Star Trek movie fans.

card backs make Inkworks' set a winner.

It's a perfect complement to the original sets.

Kurt Samuels writes the market report each issue for Entertainment Cards. During his free time, he enjoys watching Pauly Shore movies.

1965-66 Bond

Old: Philadelphia Gum, 1965-66; New: Eclipse, 1993-94; Newest: Inkworks: 1996-97

Unlike the Beatles or Elvis, James Bond is one license where each set is as equally good as the next.

Philadelphia Gum, despite the set being in black-and-white, contained great information on its card backs.

Eclipse brought the sets into color and added more information (and some pretty whacked-out captions).

1993-94 Bond

1996-97 Bond

Inkworks took it a step further by adding new photos and updating the design and text.

For the James Bond purist, the Inkworks series (five in all) may be the best because it encompasses all the films.

However, a collector can't go wrong with any of these sets.

Reader asks for help on TV Westerns set

Entertainment Cards reader Richard G. Wells of Houston, Texas, picked up a set of TV Westerns postcards while he was a child in the late 1950s or early 1960s.

After not finding the set listed in various price guides, Wells chose to tap the knowledge of our readers for the name of the set, the checklist and the approximate value of the set.

The black-and-white cards, which measure 3 1/8 x 5 1/8 inches, feature full-bleed photo fronts. Each of the cards - except "The Lone Ranger" card - includes the actor's name printed in script at the bottom of the card.

In addition, "printed in U.S.A." appears in the lower right of the blank-backed cards.

"Our family went on vacation to southern California during that time period," Wells said. "I most likely purchased (the cards) on that vacation."

"Since this time period preceded the massive tours that the Hollywood studios offer now, the cards were probably bought while visiting Corriganville, a venue where a number of western shows were filmed."

If any reader can help with the needed information about this set, write to: Tom Hultman, 700 E. State St., Iola, WI 54990.

We will share the results with readers in a future issue.

These 3 1/8 x 5 1/8-inch postcards were purchased in Corriganville, Calif., where many of the westerns were filmed. Pictured from left are Roy Rogers, Gene Autry, Clayton Moore (The Lone Ranger) and Lee Marvin.

MARKET REPORT

By Kurt Samuels

Entertainment market enjoying rebirth in first quarter of 1998

Star Trek, Xena, Babylon 5 has collectors talking new cards again

The last three years, the entertainment market has been on the skids, barely showing a pulse of excitement.

But just when the entire industry was about to take the van ride with Dr. Kevorkian, something happens: People are buying cards again.

And not just buying cards. Devouring them. Purchasing them in boxes — even cases. It almost seems like 1994 again.

OK, maybe not everyone is purchasing every set. But the excitement over Fleer/SkyBox's Star Trek: The Original Series I and Babylon 5 Series IV and Topps' Xena: Warrior Princess has gotten people (and not just the hardcore entertainment card collectors) talking about new cards once again.

Star Trek: The Original Series I is, without a doubt, the hottest card set in the last two years.

By adding an autographed card in every box, Fleer/SkyBox has taken a near-dead license and created something collectors want.

It can be seen in the box prices for the series. The cards came out with a box price between $45-$50. That price jumped up to $70 a box within two weeks (and in some places, it jumped that much in two days).

The price peaked at around $125-$150 a box. Prices have now steadied in the $100 price range for the past few weeks.

Boxes, however, are getting scarce. To secure the autograph, collectors are buying a box at a time. Similarly, dealers are breaking down boxes to sell the autograph individually.

This William Shatner autographed card tips the price guide scales at $200.

Playboy terminates Sports Time's card license

The Playboy card license has been granted to Paradigm, which will release Playboy October in May and Jenny McCarthy in June.

Playboy Enterprises recently terminated Sports Time's licenses to produce Playboy-related trading cards, giving the licenses to Paradigm sales, a division of Advanced Printing in Pleasanton, Calif.

Advanced Printing has been the printer for Playboy cards. Paradigm Sales has the exclusive right to manufacture and distribute Playboy trading cards, including the Chromium Covers and Centerfold Collector series, in the U.S., Canada, and selected country's internationally.

Paradigm will be continuing with the October edition of the Centerfold series (scheduled for a May 4 release) and the Best of Jenny McCarthy set (slated for a June 8 issue); both of those issues had been delayed several times by Sports Time.

Product delays and trouble receiving licensing monies were cited by Playboy sources as the reason for the termination.

Bob Byer of Sports Time said the company had been looking to clean up its image, particularly since sister company Group Seven Promotions will now be running the National Sports Collectors Convention.

"We have made a corporate decision to stop producing adult-oriented materials," Byer said. "We were in negotiations with Playboy, and it took some time to work out the arrangement. Corporate-wise, it was not healthy for our image. The National is certainly part of that."

"There was a lot of press regarding our relationship with The National and how we would deal with the Playboy issue, and this certainly eliminates a lot of those issues for The National."

Sports Time has four remaining licenses — artist Christian Lassen. In the Bleachers, Extreme Dinosaurs and Melrose Place.

"We are going to be re-doing our schedule," Byer said. "We're always looking for more good licenses."

Questions about Playboy trading card products should now be directed to Steve Lebowitz, Paradigm's sales director, at 1-800-452-4421.

Common autographs are selling for $125 each, on average.

Signatures of stars like William Shatner, Joan Collins and Ricardo Montalban are selling for quite a bit more.

Let's put it this way: Barrington Square Cards of West Dundee, Ill., is buying the Shatner card at $200.

But the autographs aren't the most expensive card in the set. That belongs to the ultra-rare "T" card which allows the lucky recipient to receive all 26 autographs in the series if he/she can spell out the words "Star Trek Autograph Series" using specially lettered game cards that are randomly seeded.

The price on an unvoided (non-redeemed) card is speculative, but Barrington Square is paying $1,275 for it.

But there's a flip side to this set. With so many people breaking it down, the standard set and the resulting chase cards are becoming secondary.

For instance, prices for the standard set have been selling for as low as $7 each, with the average price right at $15.

All this excitement has dealers, collectors, Trekkers and those who go after any "hot" product, breaking down boxes quicker than my grandma can say "bingo!"

It should be interesting to see how the second series, scheduled for later this spring (around May) will turn out.

I've already received pre-order messages (Pre-orders? Now that definitely reminds me of 1994) announcing price boxes in the $50-$60 range.

While Babylon 5 Series IV has the same autograph program as Star Trek: The Original Series, the response hasn't been as dramatic, but few can compare to the mother of all sci-fi geek shows.

Babylon 5 IV autographs have a lower price point on the secondary market for common autographs as compared to Star Trek: The Original Series ($50 for Babylon 5, compared to $100-$125 for Star Trek: The Original Series), but the star cards are just as hot.

For instance, the Bruce Boxleitner card has been seen as high as $200.

Another way collectors can tell these two series are popular is there are already collectors complaining that the prices are too high for the average collector.

Cornerstone is going back to press on its KISS Series I set from 1997. The second printing cards will feature a different color foil stamping.

Now that's excitement.

The last set - Xena: Warrior Princess - is not like the previous two sets. One, there are no autographed cards. Two, the series is relatively inexpensive. With only two chase sets, a master series (including promos) can be had for less than $100.

But the rumor is Topps kept the production very short, only producing to orders. Thus the production run is small and the demand is high (at least, higher than the production run).

Thus collectors and Xena fans are getting into the series. How many more fans get involved will determine if the Warrior Princess can conquer the entertainment card hobby or be like the other heroes who've been slain by poor hobby response.

These three sets may not be the only ones that will pump life into the hobby this year.

Comic Images' Meanie Babies series has capitalized on the Beanie Baby backlash, with many dealers announcing brisk sales for that set.

Upcoming in May is Inkworks' Godzilla series, which is catching a major buzz among G-fans.

And, Comic Images may have the series of the summer with South Park, which has been delayed until August.

Entertainment card optimists are seeing the signs of a positive year for non-sports cards. It may not be 1994, but let's hope it won't be another 1996!

KISS me again: Cornerstone is going back to press on its KISS Series I set from last year.

In May, the company will release a slightly different version of its KISS series, with the "buzzsaw logo" having a different color for the foil stamping.

Also, new boxes will be marked "second printing" on the bottom. Cornerstone will print 350 cases of the second printing.

Street life: Elmo and gang are back on cards; this time on a series produced in conjunction with Tyco's Sesame Street collectible toy series.

The standard-sized cards, which have to be cut from the back of the box, feature a color photo of the character, along with their birth date and other interesting facts (for instance, Elmo's first appearance on "Sesame Street" was in 1983).

'Showdown with Saddam' card set chronicles latest U.S.-Iraq squabbles Remember Desert Storm? Was it an actual war or an event to sell trading cards?

If you chose the latter, here's another series that's for you.

Called "Showdown with Saddam," Crown Sports Card Company prematurely fired the first shot into a new era of made-for-trading-card-wars by releasing a nine-card series satirizing the leaders of both the United States and Iraq in this hand-drawn set.

The series is priced at $4.95. In addition, 200 cards signed by artist Joe Thibodeau have been randomly seeded into sets.

SPORTS FEST '98

Pennsylvania Convention Center
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

MAY 27 - MAY 31 - 1998

Ten Reasons Why SportsFest Will Set a New Standard For Sports Collectible Shows

1. The largest sports collectible audience in the United States. Philadelphia is home to more than 100,000 people. Sports Collectors Digest research shows more sports collecting activity (live) within the Philadelphia market than any other area of the United States.
2. SportsFest will have the largest advertising and promotional budget in the history of sports shows. $250,000 will be devoted to promote SportsFest in the hobby and Philadelphia market.
3. The best dealer package ever offered. SportsFest will have dealer booths in one of the largest sports collectible dealers. All booths are a minimum of 10' x 10' and each 20' including entrance to the booth.
4. Guaranteed Sales! Every person in attendance at SportsFest Preview Night will be given $25 in spending money to be used at any dealer booth.
5. The most attractive floor plan in sports collectible shows. SportsFest will have a booth.
6. The entire convention center is full targeted at no extra charge to exhibitors.
7. Huge Crowd! Major League Baseball's 1998 Pinnacle All-Star Fan Fest drew over 100,000 sports fans to the same convention center.
8. Corporate and League participation.
9. A FREE Trade Show! SportsTrade is free to all exhibitors. Included in this free trade show is a free trade show for Success seminar and the chance to meet privately with leading manufacturers and licensors.
10. Krause Publications is guaranteeing SportsFest will be the best show in sports collectible history! None of the industry knows Krause as the world's largest publisher of hobby publications including Sports Collectors Digest, Sports Cards and Card Trade. Krause Publications is also the promoter of SportsFest and we're guaranteeing it will set a new standard for sports collectible shows.

SPORTSTRADE

SportsFest '98 will feature a FREE TRADE SHOW

For all exhibitors: On Friday, May 29th every SportsFest dealer will be invited to attend a special trade show (SportsTrade) free of charge. SportsTrade will be highlighted by a special presentation of Matt Herz's "Reaching For Success" seminar. The program will also include a very special keynote seminar, and conclude with each participant having the opportunity to meet face to face in small private settings with key industry leaders from the professional sports leagues, card companies, distributors, manufacturers and other prominent industry leaders.

THEY SAID IT!

"What are we doing here? We haven't had consistently year in and year out is a major show that is all-inclusive - licensors, manufacturers, distributors, dealers, collectors and sports fans - this is SportsFest in a nutshell! Pacific Trading Cards will be there." Mike Hanson, director of public relations, Pacific Trading Cards, Inc.

"SportsFest will be the show of the year this industry needs. SportsFest will provide something for everyone - serious collectors in casual sports fans. SportsFest addresses all of the issues, most importantly bringing in new collectors. Pacific will do everything we can to make sure we're a key asset to the show." Tom Hunter, VP Marketing, Playoff Corporation.

"I applaud Krause Publications' effort in getting everyone in the industry involved with SportsFest. It's important to have all of the leagues and corporations at SportsFest, and I hope they all come. We realize SportsFest will be a very large show, and we'll be there as a major buyer with check in hand." Rick Young comics since 1971!

COMICS GUIDE

By Maggie Thompson

Are you a wanna-be comics artist looking for some basic guidelines? Here's an oddball comics series which might be just what you're looking for, courtesy of reprinter A List (8332 Melrose Ave., Hollywood, CA 90069): Bridgman's Constructive Anatomy #1 (of 6) (Apr 98, b&w, $2.95). "Think in masses, define them in lines," said George Bridgman — and he begins with general anatomy and goes on to demonstrate how to draw the hand (a part of the body even some pros try to avoid). There's explanatory text and accompanying pictures in this classic work — and the comic-book format makes it ideal to toss with a sketchbook or give as a gift.

As the industry seeks to reach out to a wider audience, DC has become involved with a major, nationwide project aimed at an audience estimated by the U.S. Postal Service as 2 million. April 17, Stamp Collector Associate Editor Fred Baumann said concerning the project, "These comics target the child collector, who has proven difficult to reach." He added, regarding programs like this and the earlier Bugs Bunny collector campaign, "The Postal Service has put out these projects to attract kids, but adults started chasing after them right away." He laughed and concluded, "I'm going to get the comics myself and mount each stamp in the spaces provided." The Celebrate the Century Super Heroes Stamp Albums will be available as 10 albums alone for $14.95 or with 10 15-stamp sheets (over two years) for $54.95. Check with your branch of the U.S. Postal Service or call (800) 863-0144. The first issue (1900-1909) is an comic book with high production values: an attractive representative of the industry to non-fans. It's scripted by Doug Moench and drawn by an assortment of artists, each selection covering a different stamp. It's great for the industry, uniting two hobbies and history.

There may be folks who got left behind a bit when Superman died. They may have followed one character in another in the mythos — or they may not have bothered with the intricacies of the story since the event. Team Superman #1 (May 98, DC, $4.95) provides updatings ("Secret Files and Origins") for Superboy, Supergirl, and Steel — and "Profile Pages" of many of the other characters in their stories at this point. It's a handy reference prepared by several creators: a must-have for Superman buffs.

A-List also offers a variety of reprints in such titles as Jungle Comics #3 (Win 97, b&w, $2.95). A lot of this material is what is thought of by some collectors today as "classic Good Girl Art," and many considered it pretty hot stuff when they were hitting puberty in the 1940s. A problem with these reprints is the lack of identification of the original appearance. "Congo King" (above) was credited on the story as by Taylor Tibbett, was actually drawn by Henry C. Kiefer, and is credited on the contents page as by "Tillett & Iger." Nevertheless, you won't find this vintage material any cheaper or clearer anywhere else. If you want an economical look at a hotly collected Golden Age field, don't miss these period pieces.

COMICS STRIP

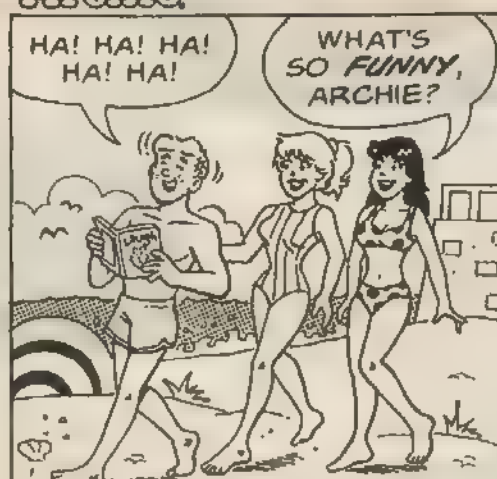

COMICS STRIP changes the way you and the consumer think about advertisements and allows you to display your talents to the Comics Buyer's Guide readers in a format that you and they love the best.

We do ask in the spirit of the comic-strip that your material be suitable (sorry, no profanity, nudity or extreme violence) for all ages.

Each COMICS STRIP is 2-5/8" h x 10" w, and it's within this creative framework that the fun really begins. You'll use at least 3/4 of the space to tell a strip joke, one-panel funny or other attention grabbing notion using sequential art. You'll want to use the remaining 1/4 to promote your actual publication.

Below is a example of how your strip might look...

COMICS IN YOUR FUTURE

Publisher's Picks & Retailer's Reviews

Painted Pony's Al Speranze: "Word of mouth on our Totally Horses series has been very positive and, with issue #5's special United States Olympic equestrian team connection, we are hoping for more exposure. This issue will be publicized not only in comics and equestrian publications, but through mainstream mass media, as well. This notoriety should lead to more readers giving the series a chance. The USET story is also inspiring for those horse-crazy kids (and adults) who dream of successfully competing in equestrian sports, so we expect the positive response to continue."

Mateer: A lot of kids (mostly girls) go through a horse stage: They read Black Beauty, they dream of owning a pony, and a lucky few actually get riding lessons and become equestrians. If you know one of these dreamy-eyed adolescents, here's a guaranteed delight for them: 40 pages of horse stories (some new, some reprints), with a hook built on the United States Olympic equestrian team. The quality of the stories ranges from just OK to high, and the total package is good enough to attract a lot of readers who normally wouldn't read comics; that's a noble mission in today's market. B.

Lawton: While not as painted into a genre corner as Protestant

Man or You've Got an Abscessed Tooth Comics, Totally Horses is definitely a photo-finisher in the oddest-concept-I've-ever-seen derby. Still, it wouldn't surprise me if there's a nation of Lisa Simpsons out there pinning away for the pony they will never get. They will probably love this, in spite of much of it being only a canter away from glue-factory soap opera. Tired of horse jokes, yet? If not, Totally Horses may be for you! C.

Bennett: Painted Pony Press has done an outstanding job of doing something the "majors" have been unable to do: create a successful girls' comic book with wide appeal to non-comics readers. Utterly charming, even to those without a "horsey" bone in their bodies, this is something every comics shop should stock. B.

Bahls: This title should have a strong appeal for young female readers. This series of stories will be a hit with anyone who enjoys the genre of horse stories, and the hilarious shorts can delight even non-horse buffs. This issue, with the inclusion of the United States equestrian Olympic team storyline, was charming. B-

Keeney: Totally Horses is a professionally produced collection of comics stories designed specifically for the 6-14 year old female market. Each issue features a true-life girl-and-her-horse story, an old-fashioned wild-stallion tale, several silly cartoons, and beautiful horse pin-ups. The stories are fun and interesting and created by people who obviously love the subject matter. Some readers will wish Totally Horses had been around when they were kids. B+.

Aliens vs. Predator: Eternal #1

Dark Horse, 24 pages, color, $2.50

Dark Horse's Kris Young: "The Aliens and Predators are back with a new four issue mini-series. Ian Edginton has a long and impressive history as a comics writer and is no stranger to the treatment of licensed properties. In Aliens vs. Predator: Eternal, Edginton, teamed with Bulgarian artist Alex Maleev, weaves an intricate tale of ambition, violence, and one man's quest for immortality. It's a story with many layers and subplots — entertaining reading that will keep the reader on the edge through the final issue."

Keeney: Aliens vs. Predator: Eternal #1 is a well-developed, logical, character-driven science-fiction story. The beautiful art and skillfully written dialogue create very real characters in very little space. This is a fresh and unique look at the Alien and Predator characters and concepts. A-

Bahls: Those who expect the usual Aliens-battling-Predator story will be surprised to find no Aliens whatsoever in the first part of this comic book. The plot grabs the reader from the beginning, and Maleev's rendering of the dark, moody scenes is excellent. Glenn Fabry's cover is stunning. This alone should draw attention to the comic book.

Mateer: Edginton has the right idea with this crossover: Don't focus on the Predators or Aliens themselves or assume that the reader knows much about them. Instead, build characters and a plot that are interesting, per se, and then mix in those two zany races of killers. With suitably shadowy art and a compelling story of an Asian peasant con artist who happened to witness the wreck of a Predator ship hundreds of years ago and, thus, began to chase immortality, Dark Horse offers another solid mini-series. B+.

Bennett: Dark Horse has wisely kept the pairings of these characters to a minimum, so there's still a visceral charge whenever they do get together. And the creators of Eternal know enough to keep the creatures off-stage for the first installment, letting the unease creep in around the edges. You know what's going to happen, but you still can't wait. B

X-O Manowar #21

Acclaim, 32 pages, color, $2.50

Acclaim's Stephen Vratatos: "Recently assigned new writer Dwayne McDuffie makes X-O his own with this emotional, character defining story that explores the armored hero and his cast. Done in One, this issue marks a perfect jumping-on point for new readers and leads directly into next month's mega-blockbuster Final Solution."

Bahls: Dwayne McDuffie has taken the X-O characters and given them new feeling and life. I thoroughly enjoyed the entire story. This would be a good place for new readers to get to know this universe, since it helps to explain much of the X-O's purpose to the uninitiated. My only regret was not being able to see the art that went along with the comic book. Anyone looking for a new title to read should give this one a try. B.

Keeney: Acclaim puts out some of the most consistently entertaining comics in today's superhero market. In this issue, X-O comes back from the dead and explores the history of the armor. As usual, the story is well-thought-through and interesting. Scott Eaton's art is always solid and beautiful. Acclaim deserves more credit for the high-quality comics it produce — comics like X-O Manowar, Quantum & Woody, Turok, and Bloodshot. B-

Mateer: The good news here is that writer Dwayne McDuffie has turned in a great script, with plot twists and revelations, characterization and humor, and a firm grasp on the elements that can make this comic book a winner. This is a great example of a jumping-on point for new readers, too. The bad news is that (1) Acclaim hasn't provided art, so I can't comment on that angle, and (2) any new readers are going to be "jumping on" a corpse, since this is the last regular issue of X-O for the foreseeable future (courtesy of the recent Acclaim implosion). Still, it's worth buying — it wraps up the storyline, leaving only a few threads dangling, and it's a worthy epitaph that makes you ache for the title's lost potential. Here's hoping that this really isn't the end of the line and we see more issues eventually. B

Biggers: It's a shame that X-O Manowar is a sort of comic-book orphan. McDuffie has done a laudable job of re-emphasizing the human side of the character. Hope McDuffie finds a new place to show off his talents — and soon! B+.

A visit to...

By Cary Coatney

"With great hunger comes immediate seating"

Next time you're out in public and have a burning impulse to bellow, "Make mine Marvel!" — make sure to specify whether you want it medium well done or medium rare.

With little Marvel fanfare, Universal Citywalk recently opened an addition to its tourist haven and shopping complex: the Marvel-themed restaurant, Marvel Mania. I was invited to sample some of the menu courtesy of Bruce Schwartz and his monthly Los Angeles Science Fiction and Comic Book Show, which gave out hundreds of passes for the restaurant.

When first stepping up to the newly dubbed "House of Culinary Ideas," you spot lively caricature cut-outs of The Human Torch, Storm, Hulk, and Spider-Man shooting neon webbing while perched on the roof. Then you are sternly greeted by matching bouncers with muscles as thick as The Hulk's. (Boy, I sure hoped I hadn't left my invitation at home.) A preventive measure, we were assured, to ward off any belligerent super-villains.

Inside the bar, my date, Lara, and I checked out glass-encased exhibits of Iron Man's armor and The Green Goblin's costume and flyer. Chances are you won't see these items displayed at the Getty, so be appreciative of Tony Stark's generosity. Then we walked into the gift shop, where you can get practically all the Marvel merchandise that you've dreamed possible, including animation cels, acetate comic-book covers, apparel, and other trinkets.

There are two dining floors. The top floor was sealed off for a private party (which, sure enough, turned out to be the post-production wrap-up for the new Silver Surfer animated series for Fox). The ambiance of the lower floor is as about what you'd expect, if you were to step into a dining room designed by Roy Lichtenstein. You're surrounded by everything that is pop art and Marvel. There are sections separated by murals of Iron Man, Hulk, and the Silver Surfer with spaces cut out of the walls in the shape of word balloons, and you can pop your head through. Even the carpet has patterns of Captain America and other Avengers running to infinity.

And no one could say that the dining experience wasn't at least loud. There is a state-of-the-art videotron in the center of the room playing Marvel animated videos accompanied by pulse-pounding soundtracks, some from shows already on Saturday mornings and some featuring new computerized images of Captain America throwing his shield and a battle royal between Wolverine and The Hulk.

Our waiter for the evening was named Dagas and was as gracious as they come, but he didn't seem to get the joke when I kept asking for Jarvis to serve us cocktails. We were handed menus designed to look like Marvel comics. Some of the inside art was designed by Adam Kubert and was divided into sections for beverages, appetizers, main courses, and, of course, Stan-wiches.

We began with a cocktail, and, since a Chi-Chi cocktail was totally left off the menu, I opted to give the Marvel Triple Action a try (just for nostalgia's sake, out of fondness for my favorite reprint title). This was described as medley of flavored rums, pineapple, and orange juice, served on the rocks with three pipettes including honeydew curaçao, cranberry, and mango liqueurs, so you can experiment to your taste's content. It had just the proper bite to it. The sensation was relaxing, but Lara had to order a stupid beer which could have been obtained from any local dive.

Next up, were the astonishing appetizers, and we both selected the Howard the Duck's Chicken Fingers, but the Shang-Chi Chinese Tacos came in a close second. What came to our table was a towering thick pile of nine pieces of coconut-battered chicken strips served with a tropical dipping sauce. My radioactive taste buds were tingling with passion fruit and pineapple, and I was happy to risk a gamma-induced massive coronary. The coconut-dipped batter was prominent but not overpowering. The juices were locked inside, and the meat practically melted in my mouth. Definitely worth the price of admission.

It was a tough call, but I think we emerged unscathed in our decisions on the main course. We skipped over such pricey stuff such as Calypso Linguine, Mary Jane's Roasted Herb Chicken, Ghost Rider's Ribs, Storm's Hurricane Shrimp, Doc Ock's Wok, and Sub Mariner's Catch of the Day. We passed over such standard fare (stuff a kid would order) as the Fantastic Four Cheese Pizza, the Captain America Burger, or the Falcon Burger. (This last was made from turkey; Cap didn't pal around with someone named The Turkey.) If you're a vegetarian, you can check out the Iron Man Burger made out of a mushroom patty.

I ended up with a tortilla wrap called the Riotous Roasted Roll-up of the Vegetable Variety. I wasn't that impressed, because it was served cold and the menu didn't note that, but the ingredients were interesting, not to mention healthy, with a mixture of eggplant, squash, beans, and mushrooms, all wrapped in a Mediterranean flat bread. Even though it posed itself as Middle Eastern dish, it came across tasting strangely Thai. What impressed me more was the scoop of baked potato salad, which is self-explanatory — just imagine bits of baked potato and sour cream in a deli-styled potato salad. Lara settled on ordering a mere Tyrannus Caesar Salad.

While we were waiting for Dagas to arrive with our food, I narrowly stopped Lara from committing a heinous atrocity: Dagas had brought her a set of magic markers so she could entertain herself coloring on the placemats while I watched cartoons on the videotron. Lara was about to color Electro's faceplate green instead of yellow. I quickly snatched the marker from her hands.

I said to her, "Hey, Babe, that's not the right color. Do me a favor. Why don't you go to the ladies' room and powder your nose? Give me a field report, OK?"

Sure enough, she came back and gave me the details. It had been like walking into a nuclear reactor: dimly lit stalls with red fluorescent bulbs. There were visuals of Spider-Man swinging his webs through a video monitor into the mirror. Never, Lara had told me, had she ever felt so violated.

Dessert was devoted to Forbidden Fruit Fajitas, a delightful and inventive blend of fresh fruit sizzling in a tangy vanilla rum sauce and vanilla ice cream and served with chocolate tortillas and raspberry or butterscotch sauces. Beats chowing down on a Choco Taco any day of the week. There were other sweet delicacies — including Ballistic Butterfinger Bread Pudding and Chocolate Volcano — but they'll have to wait until next time.

I don't frequent joints like Hard Rock Cafe or Planet Hollywood much, simply because everybody seems to be into it and you're there to pay through the nose for souvenirs to bring back rather than to enjoy a decent cooked meal. It's a cash cow, and I suspect this place will be before too long.

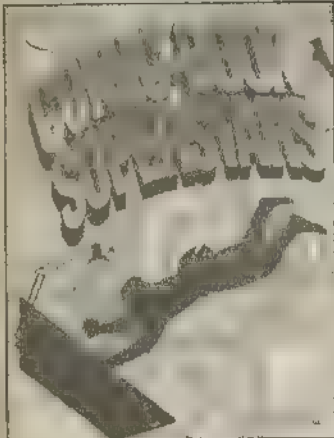

I was simply glad to be there before it opened to the general public. Overall, Marvel Mania was a groundbreaking dining experience, if you're into the themed restaurant type of thing. The menu is varied and experimental, and the design of the place itself I can only describe as livid. If you're in the area, it's worth checking out.

"Our waiter for the evening was named Dagas and was as gracious as they come, but he didn't seem to get the joke when I kept asking for Jarvis to serve us cocktails."

By Matt Brady

We all know the story by now. The once-great Marvel Comics has fallen upon hard times. The Marvel death watch has become some sort of morbid hobby for the industry. Even in the pages of CBG, the weekly Marvel Watch charts the financial ins and outs of Marvel, something that's become akin to watching a tight-rope artist — one who keeps waver-ing. But how has Marvel reacted to its continued financial woes? Instead of becoming resigned to its fate, Marvel has come back from the brink of financial ruin swinging, grabbing up some of comics' best creators for such classic titles as Avengers, Iron Man, Captain America, and The Fantastic Four. But those are series everyone knows about.

Today's Marvel Comics is a company taking risks and seems to be open to any new series idea, actively reclaiming its reputation as the House of Ideas. It's a reputation that seemed to have been tarnished in the past few years with constant X-title launches and Spider-Man tie-ins.

"In the marketplace of the early '90s, Marvel as a company could survive on X-Men and Spider-Man, but that wasn't a very realistic marketplace," Marvel Assistant Editor Jason Liebig said. "It used to be that slapping an 'X' or a 'Spider' on a cover would guarantee sales. Now, that's not the case. We've got to look at other areas that we haven't visited in a while."

And that's what's happening. When readers take a closer look at today's Marvel comics, there are smaller titles, more limited in scope, complete with characters who might not have had a leading role in a series in the past 20 years — if ever. Series like Quicksilver, Ka-Zar, Alpha Flight, Heroes for Hire, and Thunderbolts are taking up a larger portion of Marvel's publishing efforts, and, while not every one is a runaway hit, many have struck a favorable chord with fans.

According to Marvel Vice President of Publishing Shirrel Rhoades, the move to expand Marvel's line was born out of financial necessity and fueled by positive fan response.

"Starting in '96 was the conviction that we had bottomed out with how far we were cutting back and that we were going to publish again," Rhoades said. "So we started releasing a lot of new monthlies last year and we started aggressively trying to build our line of titles beyond the X-series and the Spider comics. We started with Thunderbolts, Heroes for Hire, Alpha Flight, and Ka-Zar and had very good performance on some of those titles, ranging from the lows in the 50,000 range to highs of around 100,000 an issue. It was clear to us that our fans wanted to see more of these types of titles."

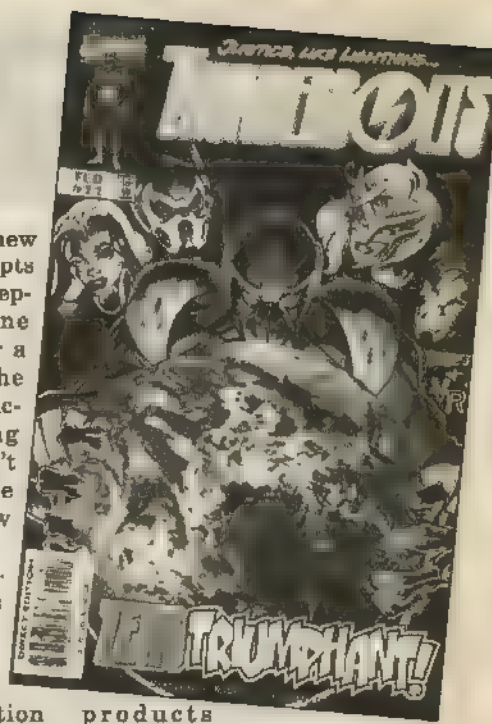

According to Rhoades, the trend of launching "fringe" titles will continue. "As you've most likely seen in the news, we're going to shake up some of the core titles, but we're trying to be very careful not to spend all our effort and talent milking the X-titles or the Spider titles," Rhoades said. "They're very good franchises, but we don't want to dilute them further. That leaves us the rest of the Marvel universe, where we have somewhere close to 4,000 copyrighted characters. That's a lot of stories to tell, a lot of new series, and a lot of new concepts to look at. Think of it as a repertory cast: We'll bring one character to center stage for a while, and then we trot the next one out, creating a succession of comics starring characters that fans haven't seen in a while, and maybe until now didn't realize how much they missed them."

Liebig said he feels the renewed interest in Marvel's lesser characters is a move that is right for a smaller marketplace, where readers have grown tired of imitation and are looking for something different. "The marketplace of the early '90s certainly wasn't rewarding innovation on a large scale," Liebig added. "While it's true that we cranked out a lot of series other than X-Men and Spider-Man in the early '90s, today's new projects and titles are different in that they're being done in a much more careful manner. As a result, we're generating more reader interest with something like Heroes for Hire than we did for Sleepwalker."

Along with revitalizing and reintroducing older heroes and series, Rhoades stressed that an important part of Marvel's publishing plan for the immediate future is several key packaging deals. Different from "Heroes Reborn," these deals would allow more creative control to be retained by Marvel, while at the same time allowing new or different voices to tell stories in the Marvel universe. "By now everyone's familiar with the packaging deal that we have with Event comics. They're literally here on our premises, act as if they are part of Marvel, and are developing four titles. They're bringing in some creators to work on them who don't normally work on Marvel comics. We see this as an opportunity to invite others to play in our sandbox."

"At the same time we have just signed a deal with Tom DeFalco to develop a whole new line of comics that will feature Spider-Girl, Juggernaut Jr., and a younger group of Avengers. Finally, we have Brian Pulido packaging four Halloween comics for us that will be released in October. So we're not just doing a lot internally to develop our products and try to make great storylines, but we're also pulling in other people and inviting others in to play."

One of the newcomers in the expansion movement is Ruben Diaz, former editor at DC and Wildstorm, who now calls Marvel home. Diaz' charge at Marvel: create a "new universe" of titles, away from traditional Marvel super-heroes.

It's something Diaz said he takes very seriously. "My personal goal is to inspire people the way many previous editors' work inspired me," Diaz said. "Mark Gruenwald used to say that every comic book you produce is someone's first comic book. That may not be quite so true now, but it's an idea I still take very personally. To inspire and attract people, Marvel has to have more flavors of super-hero than X and Spider."

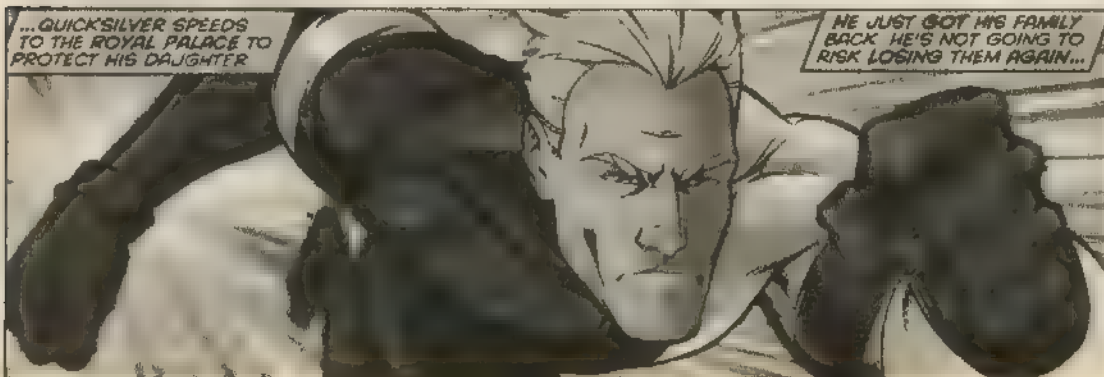

Initially, Diaz' projects include fall's Slingers, a monthly that will team Peter Parker's other aliases used during the "Identity Crisis" storyline as four new heroes. Following that, Diaz is looking to break away from traditional super-heroes.

"I'll be developing more off-genre titles, but comics that will still hit the right heroic notes for a Marvel fan," Diaz said. "Since Marvel is mostly about super-heroes, it's pretty easy to fill in genres around action-adventure and hard-boiled crime. Why not try series that are a little more fantastic in nature — or otherwise different from the Marvel comics that are out there?"

Liebig was quick to point out that, along with diversifying and strengthening Marvel's line, expansion benefits the industry as a whole. "New projects and titles like the ones we're seeing are very important to the survival of the industry," Liebig said. "While it's a given that a few will fail, some won't — and will go on to be solid sellers. Someday down the road, comics like Heroes for Hire or Thunderbolts may be seen as conventional, something we need to diversify away from, leading to even more diversity in the industry: a very good thing for its long-term survival."

According to Rhoades, it's an accepted fact that every new series won't be an unqualified hit. "I don't start out thinking that every series has to survive," Rhoades said. "I start out thinking that every series has to tell a good story. Some titles should tell a story that takes three issues, some four, some should tell a story that takes a year, some should tell it in 35 years. I don't have any problem going out, telling good stories, and then pulling the curtain. In the meantime we've launched another good story over here, and, when that runs its course, there's another one over there. It's a lot like television programming: You launch a new series and you expect it to do well. Some series go on for years and some have a naturally limited lifespans."

Following Rhoades' philosophy, former Marvel stars who are still fan and creator favorites, are waiting in the wings, each waiting for their revival to make it to the big time. Among titles being considered for revival are New Warriors, Nova, and Micronauts.

If it seems that, despite the financial doom and gloom that surrounds it, it's an exciting time for Marvel as a company, it's not far from the truth. "It's exciting to be working at a time again when there are a lot of other titles out there, kind of like in the '70s, when X-Men sat beside other Marvel comics like Master of Kung Fu, Blade, and other off-genre titles," Diaz said. "Without sounding too arrogant, that's the kind of revival that I want to help fuel: comics and genres that editors will look back on in 10 years and want to try again, because they were seen as innovative steps away from traditional super-hero comics."

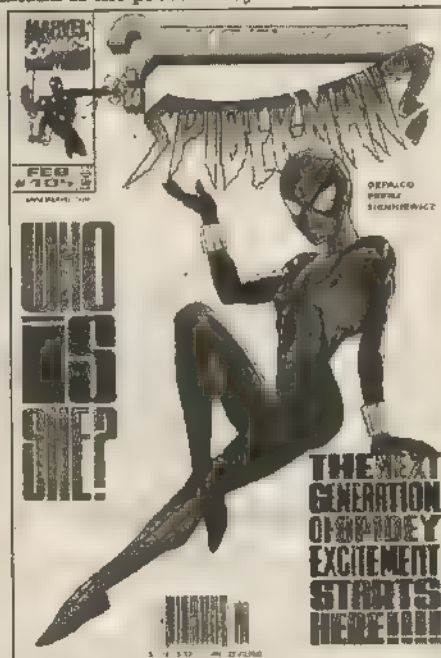

So, despite the darker attitudes of the industry, Rhoades said he remains convinced that the expansion will have a positive impact all around. "Obviously, we've become very concerned about the state of the industry when I see a number of companies like Acclaim, Topps, and Awesome cutting back radically," Rhoades said. "When the industry is in such tough times, it puts the responsibility on the surviving companies to keep the comics industry exciting and fans committed and loyal. Also, the expansion gives us a chance to invite some creators back to play. We see that as a chance to sort of share our toys a bit. It's something that means better comics for everyone, and that's what we're here to produce."

From 'What If?' to the future: Marvel looks ahead

By Michael Doran

Marvel Comics is going back to the future this summer with a new line of ongoing titles featuring the next generation of Marvel heroes and villains.

Formerly referred to in Marvel trade ads as "Excelsior," and now tentatively entitled "M2," the line was conceived by former Marvel Editor in Chief Tom DeFalco and his occasional art partner Ron Frenz (Thunderstrike) and takes place in a familiar future set approximately 15 years ahead of the present-day Marvel universe.

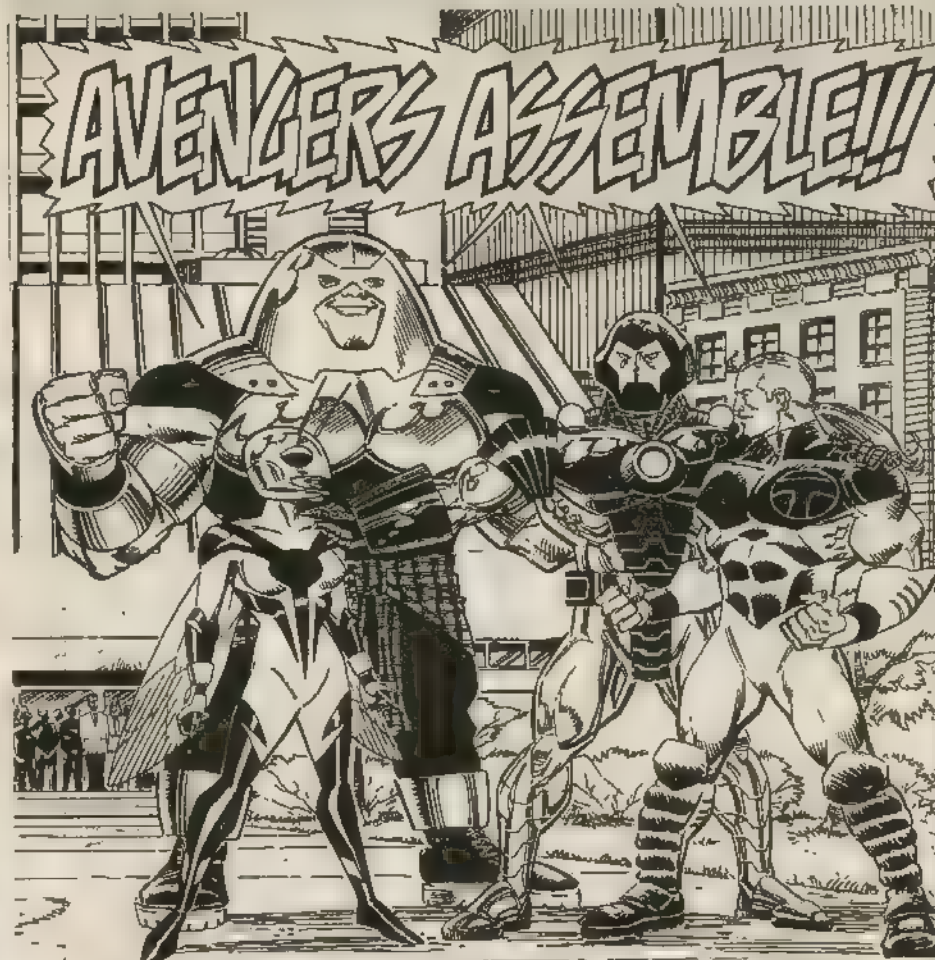

According to DeFalco, who refers to himself as "head cheerleader" of "M2," the project was born out of the surprisingly strong fan reaction to 1997's What If? #105. That story introduced Spider-Man's daughter, Spider-Girl, along with such other future concepts as The Fantastic Five, and set the tone for what the line will emphasize: fun, ease of accessibility, and an optimistic and familiar vision of what's to come.

"We're not thinking of this as a hard-core future," said DeFalco. "The bottom-line is: 15 years from now the world will look and be pretty much the same. It's a much brighter future than readers might be accustomed to — in this universe almost all the old heroes turned out fine. Some didn't make it, but, when you're heroes in life and death situations, you don't always make it. But the ones who didn't went out heroically. And, as a result of whatever sacrifices they had to make, the world is a much better place. We're all kind of happy again."

The line's first three monthly titles — scheduled to begin in August or September and all initially to be written by DeFalco — include:

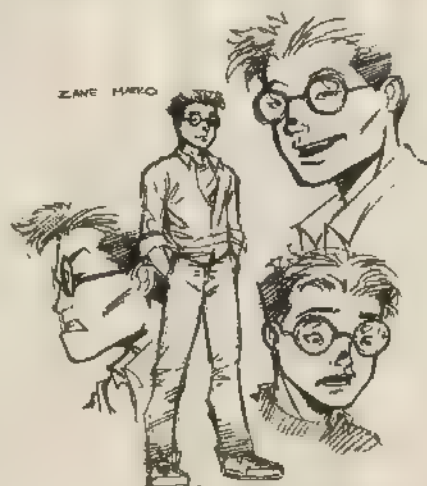

SPIDER-GIRL

Spider-Girl — Pencilled by former Untold Tales of Spider-Man artist Pat Olliffe, the series will feature May Parker, star of What If? #105 and daughter of Peter Parker and Mary Jane, who also appear as regular cast members. According to DeFalco, "This will be the line's teen-angst adventure series."

J2 — Pencilled by Ron Lim, the series stars the son of Cain Marko, the original Juggernaut. "This is more of a blatant, hoo-hah humor comic book and will actually feature multiple stories per issue," DeFalco said.

A-NEXT

A-Next — Pencilled by Ron Frenz, it stars a future-day team of Avengers. DeFalco termed it "probably the closest thing to a traditional super-hero title in the line. We'll have three young super-heroes, Stinger, Thunderstrike, and J2, all trying to live up to being Avengers while they also deal with their personal issues. For example, J2's father was a villain, but J2 is the most enthusiastic of A-Next. They'll be dealing with living parents and ghosts of parents while they handle being heroes."

DeFalco told CBG, "All of this line is crazy hoo-hah. Every issue will be a stand-alone, complete, and a solid story."

Whether the line grows from there depends on how readers receive these titles, but DeFalco said he has confidence his neo/retro vision will find an enthusiastic audience. "We're trying something different with this, but something kind of the same," he said. "I have a theory that these days comics are really hard to read, and that it takes readers 10 issues of any series to really know what the heck is going on. I want to get back to where everything is totally accessible. If you pick up the third issue of these titles, you can hit the ground running. This is fun and games in a merry Marvel manner for anyone who likes super-hero, adventure-style comic books."

"Our goal is to reach the point at which you will buy these comics because you will love them. We don't want you to buy the titles because they're part of a cross-over or the middle of a continued story. We want to make you buy these titles because of your enthusiasm for their stories."

The advertisers' index is provided as a reader service. Occasional last minute changes may result in ads appearing on pages other than those listed here. The publisher assumes no liability for omissions or errors.

GENERAL INFORMATION

- C. DEADLINE: For all advertising is 4:00 p.m. each Tuesday, unless otherwise stated on deadline card.
- D. TERMS: Cash with copy only. All advertisers must provide information for the confidential use of the publisher should questions arise.
- E. CONTRACT RATES: are available for 6, 13, 26, or 52 consecutive issues. Contract rates apply to fulfillment of contract items. Cancellation of a contract by the advertiser allows the publisher to reinvoice covered ads at the earned rate. This rate card is a part of the advertising contract.
- F. MINORS: are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parent or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.
- G. ERRORS: Typewritten copy is recommended. The publisher is not responsible for errors resulting from long-hand or illegible copy, or changes submitted by telephone. The publisher's liability for any error shall not exceed the cost of the space occupied by that error.
- H. LAYOUT: and design services are provided by Krause Publications for advertisers who do not submit camera-ready copy. Due to the creative and subjective nature of these services, credit will not be allowed for conceptual variations.
- I. GRADING: Items offered in any ad must be properly described as to condition, conforming to the standards set forth in Comics Buyer's Guide Price Guide. Advertisers may also exercise the option of grading offerings by applying a unique personal system, providing the standards applied are detailed in the ad to avoid confusion.
- J. RETURN PRIVILEGE: Except as otherwise specified in any ad, an advertiser must accept the return of any merchandise postmarked within ten working days of its receipt by a customer.

- O. SPACE RESERVATIONS: available for camera ready ads only. Must be made prior to ad deadline. Reserved space must be paid for even if ad does not arrive on time.
- P. PRE-PRINTED INSERTS: are available in Comics Buyer's Guide. Inquire for additional information and technical specifications.

Krause Publications, Inc. reserves the right to decline advertising or suspend advertising privileges for such periods of time as in its discretion it sees fit, for any reason, whatsoever, irrespective of the validity of the reasons for such declination or suspension. The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. All agreements are subject to strikes, accidents, acts of God, or other contingencies beyond the publisher's control. The publisher reserves the right to edit any advertising copy to conform with its standard advertising policies, and to reject any ad which in its opinion is unethical or objectionable for any reason.
